land called warping is or may be practised) of all or any of the lands comprised in such lease, or for the erection of any new or additional farmhouses, barns, or outhouses, or other farm buildings, which the condition or local situation of the lands to be comprised in such lease may require or render expedient, or for putting in repair any houses, edifices, or buildings to be comprised in any such lease, or for making any substantial improvements on the premises, or for the reservation or payment of any additional rent or rents, or penalty on breach of any of the covenants or agreements contained in any such lease, shall not be deemed or construed to be a fine, foregift, premium, or consideration for the granting of such lease within the meaning of this act: Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to preclude the lessor in any such lease from covenanting that the lessee shall be entitled to have or take from off the demised premises brick earth, stone, lime, or other materials for the erection or repair of any buildings, or for the construction or repair of drains, or for any other necessary improvements, and sufficient rough timber, to be assigned by the incumbent for the time being, or his agent duly authorized, for any of the purposes aforesaid, and for the making or repair of gates and fences: Provided also, that the custom of the country as to outgoing tenants shall apply to each lease to be granted under this act, except so far as the lease shall contain any express stipulation to the contrary: Provided also, that the term to be granted by any such lease as aforesaid may be twenty years in any case where the lessee shall covenant thereby to adopt and use any mode or system of cultivation more expensive than the usual course, or to drain or subdivide, or embank and warp, at his expense, any part of the demised premises, or to erect, at his own expense, on the said premises, any buildings, or to repair in a more extensive manner and at a greater expense than is usually required of lessees of farms any buildings on the demised premises, or in any other manner to improve, at his expense, the demised premises or any part thereof.

2. That the authority given by this act shall not render valid any lease to be granted in the manner hereinbefore mentioned, unless the parsonage house or other the house of residence of or belonging to the benefice, and all offices, outbuildings, yards, gardens, orchards, and plantations to such parsonage house or other house of residence adjoining and appurtenant, and which may be necessary or convenient for actual occupation with such parsonage house or other house of residence, and also so much glebe land or other land of or belonging to the benefice, and situated the most conveniently for actual occupation by the incumbent, as, together with the site of such parsonage house or other house of residence, offices, and outbuildings, and with such yards, gardens, orchards, and plantations as aforesaid, shall amount to ten acres at least, if there shall be ten or more acres of such land situated within five miles from the parsonage or other the house of residence, or if there shall be less than ten acres so situated, then the whole of such land shall be reserved out of or not be comprised in such lease, and not be comprised in any subsisting lease for the time being which shall have been previously granted under the authority of this act: Provided always, that in any case where the lands comprised in any lease granted under the authority of this act shall be situate five miles or upwards from the parsonage house or other the house of residence, or (in case there shall be no parsonage house or other house of residence) from the church or chapel of the benefice to which such lands shall belong, the provision herein contained for the reservation of a stipulated number of acres of the glebe land or other land of or belonging to the benefice shall not be applicable.

3. That whenever any lease is intended to be granted under the authority of this act, a competent land surveyor shall be appointed by the bishop of the diocese and the patron and incumbent of the benefice, by some writing under their respective hands; and such surveyor shall make a map or plan under an actual survey of the lands proposed or intended to be leased, and of the other lands of or belonging to the benefice, or of such part or parts of the said other lands as will sufficiently shew to the bishop of the diocese and the patron of the benefice the relative positions or local situations and quantities of the lands proposed or intended to be leased, and of the lands (if any) intended to be reserved, and as will enable them to form an accurate judgment of the situation and convenience for actual occupation of the lands intended to be reserved; and such surveyor shall certify that the lands intended to be leased, and such buildings and other hereditaments (if any) as are intended to be leased therewith, are proper to be leased to a tenant under the provisions of this act, and (in any case where the provision hereinbefore contained respecting the reservation of a stipulated number of acres may be applicable) that the lands which are intended to remain unlet are such part of the glebe land or other land of or belonging to the benefice as is situated the most conveniently for actual occupation by the incumbent thereof; and such surveyor shall also make a valuation on actual survey of the lands and hereditaments proposed or intended to be leased, and shall report what is the best yearly rent which ought to be reserved upon a lease of such lands and hereditaments under the circumstances under which such lease is proposed or intended to be granted, and shall state the course of husbandry or management of such lands and hereditaments which ought in the opinion of such surveyor to be adopted by the tenant thereof; and in any case where it is proposed that the lease shall contain special covenants on the part of the lessee for the drainage or subdividing, or embanking or warping, of all or any of the lands to be comprised in the lease, or for the erection of any new or additional farmhouses, barns, or outhouses, or other farm buildings, or for putting in repair any houses, edifices, or buildings to be comprised in the lease, or for making any substantial improvement in the premises, such surveyor shall certify that in his opinion the covenants for those purposes are proper covenants to be entered into by the lessee under the circumstances of the case, and he shall state the amount by which the yearly rent to be reserved by the proposed lease ought in his judgment to be diminished in respect of or on account of the lessee entering into such covenants; and in any case where it is proposed that the lessee shall be entitled to have or take from off the demised premises brick earth, stones, lime, or other materials, or rough timber, for any of the purposes hereinbefore mentioned, he shall also certify that in his opinion covenants on the part of the lessor for those purposes are proper to be entered into, and that he has taken the matter into his consideration in estimating the amount of rent to be reserved by the proposed lease; and such surveyor shall in all cases also report upon and state such other matters or things (if any) connected with such intended lease, or the lands and hereditaments proposed or intended to be therein comprised, as he shall, by such bishop, patron, and incumbent, or any of them, be directed to report upon; and the map or plan, certificate, valuation, and report of such surveyor, shall be respectively signed by such surveyor, and verified by his declaration to be made before any justice of the peace, and shall, immediately upon the completion thereof, respectively be delivered to the bishop of the diocese: provided always, that in all cases in which there shall be in the possession of the bishop of the diocese, or of the patron or incumbent of any benefice, or of the parish officers of the parish in which such benefice may be comprised, any map or plan made under an actual survey of the parish, or of such part thereof as shall include the lands proposed or intended to be demised, a copy of or an extract from such map or plan may be substituted for the map or plan hereinbefore directed to be made by any such surveyor as aforesaid.

4. That the receipt in writing of the incumbent by whom any lease shall be granted under the authority of this act, acknowledging that he has received the counterpart, or an attested copy in all cases where there shall be only one part, of such lease, and signed by such incumbent, and indorsed on the lease, shall be conclusive evidence that the counterpart or lease (as the case may be) has been duly executed by the lessee, and also in all cases where there shall be only one part of such lease that the attested copy is a true and faithful transcript of the original lease; and the execution by the bishop and patron, whose consents are hereby made requisite, of any lease to be granted under the authority of this act, shall be conclusive evidence that the lease does not comprise any lands which ought not to be leased under the provisions of this act, and that a proper portion of the glebe land remains unleased, and that the rent reserved by such lease is the best and most improved rent that could be reasonably gotten for the lands and hereditaments comprised therein at the time of granting such lease, and that all the covenants contained in such lease are proper covenants.

5. That no surrender of any lease which shall have been made under the authority of this act shall be valid to any purpose whatsoever, unless the bishop of the diocese and the patron and incumbent of the benefice to which the lands or hereditaments comprised in such lease shall belong shall respectively be made parties to and execute the deed or instrument by which such surrender shall be made; and every such surrender shall have operation from the time only when such deed or instrument as aforesaid shall have been executed by all the persons whose execution thereof is hereinbefore required.

6. In cases of peculiars belonging to bishops, such bishops to exercise, within their peculiars, the powers given by this act, but with respect to all peculiars belonging to any other person than archbishops or bishops, such powers to be exercised by the bishop of the diocese within which such peculiar shall be locally situated.

7. That whenever the consent or concurrence of the patron of any benefice, or of the lord for the time being of any manor, is hereby required, and the patron of such benefice, or the lord for the time being of such manor, (as the case may be), shall happen to be a minor, idiot, lunatic, or feme covert, or beyond seas, it shall be lawful for the guardian, committee, husband, or attorney (as the case may be) of such patron or lord (but in the case of a feme covert not being a minor, idiot, or lunatic, or beyond seas, with her consent in writing,) to execute the instrument by which such consent or concurrence is to be testified, in testimony of the consent or concurrence of such patron or lord; and such execution shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed and taken to be an execution by the patron of the benefice or by the lord of the manor (as the case may be).

8. That in any case in which the consent or concurrence of the patron of any benefice is hereby required, and the patronage of such benefice shall be in the crown, the consent or concurrence of the crown shall be testified in the manner hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say), if such benefice shall be above the yearly value of 20*l.* in the King's books, the instrument by which such consent or concurrence shall be testified shall be executed by the Lord High Treasurer or First Lord Commissioner of the Treasury for the time being; and if such benefice shall not exceed the yearly value of 20*l.* in the King's books, such instrument shall be executed by the Lord High Chancellor, or Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal, for the time being; and if such benefice shall be within the patronage of the crown in right of the Duchy of Lancaster, such instrument shall be executed by the Chancellor of the said Duchy for the time being; and the execution of such instrument by such person or persons shall be deemed and taken, for the purposes of this act, to be an execution by the patron of the benefice.

9. That in any case in which the consent or concurrence of the patron of any benefice is hereby required, and the right of patronage of such benefice shall be part of the possessions of the Duchy of Cornwall, the consent or concurrence of the patron of such benefice to the exercise of such power shall be testified in the manner hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say), the instrument by which such consent or concurrence is to be testified shall, whenever there shall be a Duke of Cornwall, whether he be of full age or otherwise, be under his great or privy seal, or if there be no Duke of Cornwall, and such benefice shall be in the patronage of the crown in right of the Duchy of Cornwall, such instrument shall be executed by the person or persons who is or are authorized to testify the consent or concurrence of the crown; and such instrument, being so sealed or executed, shall be deemed and taken, for the purposes of this act, to be an execution by the patron of the benefice.

10. That in any case in which the consent or concurrence of the patron of any benefice or of the lord of any manor is hereby required, and the patronage of such benefice, or (as the case may be) the lordship of such manor, shall belong to any dean and chapter, or collegiate or other corporate body having a common seal, the consent or concurrence of such dean and chapter, or collegiate or other corporate body, shall be testified by the sealing of the instrument by which such consent or concurrence is to be testified with the common seal of such dean and chapter, collegiate or other corporate body.

11. That the person or persons (if not more than two), or the majority of the persons (if more than two), or the corporation, who or which would for the time being be entitled to the turn or right of presentation to any benefice if the same were then vacant, shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered to be the patron thereof: Provided nevertheless, that in the case of the patronage being exercised alternately by different patrons, the person or persons (if not more than two), or the majority of the persons (if more than two), or the corporation, who or which would for the time being be entitled to the second turn or right of presentation to any benefice, if the same were then vacant, shall, for the purposes of this act, jointly with the person or persons or corporation entitled to the first turn or right of presentation, be considered to be the patron thereof.

12. That in all cases in which any person shall sustain any more than one of the aforesaid characters of bishop of the diocese, patron, lord of the manor, and incumbent, in respect of any benefice to which the provisions of this act extend, every such person shall or may at any time act in both or all of the characters which he shall so sustain as aforesaid, and execute and do all and every or any of such deeds and acts as are hereby authorized to be executed and done, as effectually as different persons, each sustaining one of those characters, could execute and do to the same.

13. That whenever any lands or hereditaments proposed to be leased under the provisions of this act are or shall be vested in any trustee or trustees, in trust for or for the benefit of any incumbent hereby empowered to grant leases as aforesaid, in such a manner as that the net income or three-fourth parts at the least of the net income of such lands and hereditaments is, or shall be payable for the exclusive benefit of such incumbent, all the powers of this act which, in case such lands and hereditaments had been legally vested in such incumbent for the sole and exclusive benefit of such incumbent, might have been exercised by such incumbent in relation to or affecting the same lands and hereditaments, shall or may be exercised by such incumbent in the same or the like manner as the same might have been exercised by such incumbent in case the same lands and hereditaments were legally vested in such incumbent as aforesaid; but in order to give legal effect to any lease to be executed in relation to any such lands and hereditaments, in pursuance of this act, the trustee or trustees of the premises intended to be affected thereby shall be made a party or parties to such lease (in addition to the other parties whose concurrence is hereby declared to be requisite to any such lease), and shall join in the demise intended to be thereby made; and the trustee or trustees of any such lands or hereditaments is and are hereby directed and required at all times to execute any lease which he or they may be made a party or parties, with a view to give legal effect to any such lease as aforesaid, as soon as the same may be tendered to him or them for execution, after the same shall have been duly executed by the incumbent beneficially entitled to such premises, and the bishop and patron, whose consents are hereby declared to be requisite to the validity of any lease granted by such incumbent; and the fact that any such lease is executed by the said other parties shall be a sufficient authority for the execution thereof by the trustee or trustees of the same premises, and it shall not at any time afterwards be necessary for such trustee or trustees, or for any other person or persons, to prove that such deed was executed by such other parties, or any of them; prior to the execution thereof by such trustee or trustees; provided that no trustee shall by virtue of or under this provision be compellable to execute any lease whereby he shall render himself in any way liable, further than by a covenant for quiet enjoyment by any lease against the acts of the trustee executing such deed.

14. That the part of every lease granted under this act, which shall belong to any incumbent, or, in case there shall not be more than one part of any such lease, an attested copy thereof, and every surrender to be made under this act, together with the writing by which a surveyor shall have been appointed as aforesaid, and the map or plan, or copy of or extract from a map or plan, (as the case may be), certificate, valuation, and report hereinafter directed to be made before the granting of such lease, shall, within six calendar months next after the date of such lease, be deposited in the office of one of the registrars of the diocese wherein such benefice shall be locally situated, to be perpetually kept and preserved therein, except where the benefice shall be under the peculiar jurisdiction of any archbishop or bishop, in which case the several documents before mentioned shall be deposited in the office of the registrar of the peculiar jurisdiction to which such benefice shall be subject; and such registrars respectively, or their respective deputies, shall, upon any such deposit being so made, sign and give unto the incumbent a certificate of such deposit; and such lease or attested copy and other documents so to be deposited shall be produced, at all proper and usual hours, at such registry, to the incumbent of the benefice for the time being, or to the patron of such benefice for the time being, or to any person on their or either of their behalf, applying to inspect the same; and an office copy thereof, respectively certified under the hand of the registrar or his deputy, (and which office copy, so certified, the registrar or his deputy shall in all cases, upon application in that behalf, give to the incumbent for the time being of such benefice), shall in any action against the lessee, and in all other cases, be admitted and allowed in all courts whatsoever as legal evidence of the contents of such lease, or of any such other document, and of the due execution of the counterpart of such lease by the lessee, if there shall be any counterpart, and of the due execution of the lease and of every such other document by the parties who on the face of such office copy shall appear to have executed the same; and every such registrar shall be entitled to the sum of 5s., and no more, for so depositing as aforesaid the documents hereinbefore directed to be deposited, and for certifying the deposit thereof, and the sum of 1s., and no more, for each search and inspection, and the sum of 6d., and no more, over and besides the stamp duty (if any) for each folio of seventy-two words of each office copy so certified as aforesaid.

15. That in the construction and for the purposes of this act the several following words shall have the meanings hereinafter assigned to them respectively (unless there shall be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction): (that is to say),

The word "person" shall be construed to include the Queen's Majesty, and any corporation, aggregate or sole, as well as any private individual:

The word "lands" shall be construed to include lands of any tenure:

The word "benefice" shall be construed to comprehend every rectory, vicarage, perpetual curacy, domestic, endowed public chapel, parished chapel, and district chapel, the incumbent of which in right thereof shall be a corporation sole:

And every word importing the singular number shall extend and be applied to several persons or things as well as one person or thing; and every word importing the plural number shall extend and be applied to one person or thing as well as to several persons or things:

And every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male.

16. That this act shall extend only to that part of the United Kingdom called England and Wales, and to the Isle of Man, and to the Islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Sark.

[18th June, 1842.]

CAP. XXXII.

An Act for better mending Fines and Recoveries in Wales and Cheshire. [18th June, 1842.]

Sect. 1. That all fines levied in the lately abolished courts of great sessions in the principality of Wales, or in the lately abolished court of session of the county palatine of Chester, of which the writ of covenant was duly returned and compounded, and of which the acknowledgment was before the judge or by commissioners duly taken and allowed, and of which the said writs and concords, with other proceedings, were lodged in the office of the prothonotary of the county in which the lands named in such writs are situated, shall be holden good and firm in law, notwithstanding the misprision or neglect of any prothonotary, deputy prothonotary, secondary, or other officer of any of the said courts, or their clerks, or any other public officer whatsoever, to file the same, or to engross the chirograph or foot of such fine, to indorse or record the proclamations thereof, or to inrol or docket the said fine, or do any other thing which by his office he ought to have done after the acknowledgment of the said fine.

2. That where it shall be needful to prove that any fine which appears to have been duly acknowledged was levied with proclamations in any of the said courts, it shall be taken to have been so levied, and shall have all the force of a fine levied with proclamations, although no chirograph or foot of such fine be found indorsed with the proclamations, nor any entry of them or any of them appear on record, if such fine were duly inrolled or entered on the plea roll of the session in which it was levied, or docketed in the docket roll or docket book of such session, so as to set forth the names of the parties and the places in which the lands are situated of which such fine was levied; or if within three years from the passing of this act, or such further time as the Court of Common Pleas shall in any case allow, such fine shall have been docketed, in such form as aforesaid, in docket rolls or docket books of parchment or vellum, by the several late prothonotaries of the said abolished courts, or in case of the death or inability of any such prothonotary by some person or persons appointed for that purpose by the Master of the Rolls; or if within the said period of three years, or such further time as the Court of Common Pleas shall in any case allow, the writ of covenant, and the concord and all other proceedings of such fine, shall have been inrolled, with the allowance of the said court, in a book or books, roll or rolls of parchment or vellum, as hereinafter provided: Provided always, that any such fine may be reversed by writ of error issued within twenty years from the levying thereof.

3. That all recoveries suffered in any of the said abolished courts whereof the writ of entry was duly returned, and the appearance of the tenant and vouches or vouches duly recorded by the court, or the warrant or warrants of attorney duly executed and allowed, and of which the said writ and other proceedings (if any) was or were lodged in the office of the prothonotary of the county in which the lands named in the said writ are situated, shall be holden good and firm in law, notwithstanding the non-inrolment or non-exemplification of such recovery, or any other misprision or neglect of any prothonotary or other officer as aforesaid to do anything which by his office he ought to have done after the recording of the appearance of the tenant and vouches or vouches, or the execution and allowance of the warrant or warrants of attorney: provided nevertheless, that where no inrolment on the plea roll of the session in which such recovery was suffered, or any exemplification of a pretended inrolment thereof, sealed with the judicial seal of the court, or any entry on the remembrance roll sufficient to prove the arraignment of the writ of entry, can be found or produced, no such recovery shall be holden good by virtue of this act, unless within three years after the passing of this act, or such further time as the Court of Common Pleas shall in any case allow, the writ of entry or other proceedings extant of record touching the said recovery shall be inrolled as hereinafter provided, or such recovery shall have been docketed in full and ample manner as aforesaid: Provided also, that any such recovery may be reversed by writ of error issued within twenty years from the suffering thereof.

4. That subject to such orders as the Court of Common Pleas from time to time shall make, any person may at any time henceforward cause the writ, concord, chirograph, proclamation, appearance, warrant of attorney, and all or any other proceedings in any fine or recovery levied or suffered in any of the said abolished courts, and now extant among the public records thereof, to be inrolled in the office of the registrar of certificates and affidavits of acknowledgments of deeds by married women in the Court of Common Pleas, which office, for the purposes of an act passed in the 27 Eliz. [c. 9], intituled "An Act for Reformation of Errors in Fines and Recoveries in the twelve Shires of Wales and Counties Palatine, and for Exemplification of Fines and Recoveries generally," and under such of the provisions of the said act as are now capable of taking effect, shall be deemed to be the inrolment office therein named: Provided always, that no such inrolment of any writ of covenant or writ of entry shall be made as aforesaid where such writ shall not have been duly filed upon the proper file of the session in which the same was returnable, unless the compounding of such writ shall be proved to the satisfaction of the said registrar by an entry thereof duly made in the book of the compounder of King's silver for the county in which the lands named in such writ are situated; and in every such case such entry or certificate of composition made shall be inrolled together with such writ.

5. That the Court of Common Pleas shall have the same power of amending any fine or recovery, and the record or inrolment thereof, whether as now extant, or as such fine or recovery, or any proceedings thereof, shall hereafter be inrolled in manner aforesaid, as if the same had been originally levied, suffered, or had in the Court of Common Pleas.

[30th June, 1842.]

CAP. XXXVIII.

An Act to define the Jurisdiction of Justices in General and Quarter Sessions of the Peace.

[30th June, 1842.]

Whereas it is expedient that the powers of justices in general and quarter sessions of the peace with respect to the trial of offences be better defined; Be it enacted &c., That after the passing of this act neither the justices of the peace acting in and for any county, riding, division, or liberty, nor the recorder of any borough, shall, at any session of the peace, or at any adjournment thereof, try any person or persons for any treason, murder, or capital felony, or for any felony which, when committed by a person not previously convicted of felony, is punishable by transportation beyond the seas for life, or for any of the following offences; (that is to say),

1. Misprision of treason:
2. Offences against the Queen's title, prerogative, person, or government, or against either House of Parliament:
3. Offences subject to the penalties of premeditation:
4. Blasphemy and offences against religion:
5. Administering or taking unlawful oaths:
6. Perjury and subornation of perjury:
7. Making or suborning any other person to make a false oath, affirmation, or declaration, punishable as perjury or as a misdemeanor:
8. Forgery:
9. Unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to crops of corn, grain, or pulse, or to any part of a wood, coppice, or plantation of trees, or to any heath, gorse, furze, or fern:
10. Bigamy, and offences against the laws relating to marriage:
11. Abduction of women and girls:
12. Endeavouring to conceal the birth of a child:
13. Offences against any provision of the laws relating to bankrupts and insolvents:

14. Composing, printing, or publishing blasphemous, seditious, or defamatory libels:
15. Bribery:
16. Unlawful combinations and conspiracies, except conspiracies or combinations to commit any offence which such justices or recorder respectively have or has jurisdiction to try when committed by one person:
17. Stealing or fraudulently taking, or injuring or destroying, records or documents belonging to any court of law or equity, or relating to any proceeding therein:
18. Stealing or fraudulently destroying or concealing wills or testamentary papers, or any document or written instrument being or containing evidence of the title to any real estate or any interest in lands, tenements, or hereditaments:

Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to give authority to the justices of the peace acting in and for the cities of London and Westminster, the liberty of the Tower of London, the borough of Southwark, and the counties of Middlesex, Essex, Kent, and Surrey, to try any person or persons for any offence committed or alleged to be committed within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, which such justices are restrained from trying under the provisions of an act passed in the 4 & 5 Will. 4, [c. 36], intitled "An Act for establishing a new Court for the Trial of Offences committed in the Metropolis and Parts adjoining."

2. That it shall be lawful for any judge of one of her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster, acting under any commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery for any county, to issue, if he shall think fit, any writ or writs of certiorari or other process, directed to the justices of the peace acting in and for such county, riding, division, or liberty, or to the recorder of any borough situated within the said county, commanding the said justices and recorder severally to certify and return, into the court holden under the authority of such commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, all indictments or presentments found or taken before any of the said justices of the peace or recorder of any offences which, after the passing of this act, such justices or recorder will not have jurisdiction to try, and the several recognizances, examinations, and depositions relative to such indictments and presentments; and also, if necessary, by writ or writs of habeas corpus, to cause any person or persons who may be in the custody of any gaol or prison, charged with any such offence, to be removed into the custody of the keeper of the common gaol of the county, so that the same offences may be dealt with, tried, and determined according to law, under the authority of the said commission.

3. That every recognizance which shall have been entered into for the prosecution of any person at any court of sessions of the peace, for any offence which after the passing of this act such court will not have jurisdiction to try, and every recognizance for the appearance, as well of any witness to give evidence upon any bill of indictment or presentment for any such offence, as of any person to answer our lady the Queen for any such offence, or to answer generally before such court, shall, in case any writ of certiorari or habeas corpus be issued for the purpose of removing such indictment or presentment, or such person so in custody as aforesaid, be obligatory on the parties bound by such recognizance to prosecute and appear, and give evidence, and do all other things therein mentioned, with reference to the indictment or presentment or person so removed as aforesaid, before the justices of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery acting in and for that county, in like manner as if such recognizance had been originally entered into for prosecuting such offence, appearing, or giving evidence, or doing such other things before the said justices of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery: provided always, that one week's notice shall have been given, either personally or by leaving the same at the place of residence as of which the parties bound by such recognizance are therein described, to appear before the court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, instead of the said court of sessions of the peace: provided also, that the judge who shall grant such writ of certiorari or habeas corpus shall cause the party applying for such writ or writs, whether he be the prosecutor or party charged with such offence, to enter into a recognizance, in such sum, and with or without sureties, as the judge may direct, conditioned to give such notice as aforesaid to the parties bound by such recognizance to appear before the said court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, instead of before the said court of sessions of the peace respectively, and to do such other things with reference to the indictment, presentment, or person removed as such court or judge shall direct.

4. And whereas it is expedient to enlarge the powers of justices of the peace for dividing their several courts of session of the peace; be it enacted, That whenever any court of general or quarter session or adjourned session of the peace shall be assembled for the despatch of business thereunto belonging, and there shall be any order of the court in force for the appointment of a permanent chairman and deputy chairman of the said court, it shall be lawful for the justices then present, if it shall appear to them advisable, having regard to the business to be disposed of, to appoint two or more justices, one of whom shall be such deputy chairman, to sit apart in some convenient place in or near the court, there to hear and determine such business as shall be referred to them, whilst others of the justices, one of whom shall be the said chairman, are at the same time proceeding in the despatch of the other business of the same court, and that the proceedings so had by and before the justices so sitting apart shall be as good and effectual in the law as if the same were had before the court assembled and sitting as usual in its ordinary place of sitting, and shall be inrolled and recorded accordingly; and that the several provisions of an act of the 59 Geo. 3, [c. 28], intitled "An Act to empower Magistrates to divide the Court of Quarter Sessions," shall, so far as may be, extend and be applicable to the second court so to be holden as aforesaid.

5. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of parliament.

6. That this act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

LONDON, AUGUST 6, 1842.

It occurs sometimes that men who have been for a long course of years engaged in a particular profession, and who while so engaged are unaware, partly it must be presumed from their minds being engrossed with the transaction of business, and partly by reason of their own pure and disinterested feelings, of the existence of any tendency in the practices of their profession, to warp the conscience and place men in a position in which the auri sacra fames may taint their souls, or the breath of suspicion may blight their reputations,—we say that it will sometimes occur, that when such men have, by the exercise of their talents, lifted themselves to a height so far above their quondam professional brethren, that they can stand as it were surveying from afar the field of their former labours, then a mist falls from their eyes. The abominations through which they, favoured by fortune, have passed unscathed, are revealed to their astonished vision;—they perceive with a pious horror the dangers which once beset their honesty, and shuddering at the perils they have avoided, they determine to use their utmost endeavours to save from similar temptation, those who may not possess strength to resist as they have done.

A discussion took place lately in the House of Lords on the subject of allowing counsel to appear at the Bar of that House for or against bills depending there, who should be members of the Lower House, (see ante, p. 262); and in the course of that debate, much curious light was thrown upon the springs of action that impel the Bar. It is stated to have been argued, that it was inexpedient to permit members of the House of Commons to appear as counsel in respect of bills which either had been or might come before that House, because the fee to the barrister might bias the judgment and vote of the legislator. Suppose, said a noble and learned Lord, "the case of a bill introduced into the House of Commons, on the merits of which it would be necessary that counsel should be heard at their Lordships' Bar, and that before the bill came into the House of Commons a retainer was left at the chambers of a barrister being a member of that House, to engage his support for the bill at their Lordships' Bar; and he was called on in the House to exercise his judgment on the bill, and support it or oppose it as an independent member, was it to be supposed that in no case and in no degree his judgment would be biased by the fee he had received?"

We confess we, in our ignorance, should have thought in no instance. We have been led to believe, taking first what may be termed the mammonite view of the question, that a fee is a quiddam honorarium for a specific service; that if a fee is delivered with a brief, it is paid for the service of the barrister in reading that particular brief, and arguing to the best of his ability on the particular subject-matters set forth in it; and we certainly have not been taught, (shame on the careless preceptor who so suffered us to go forth in ignorance!) that a fee to counsel to address the House of Lords as such, is to be considered by him as a fee to do that and something more, viz. to speak or vote against his belief as a member of Parliament. We should have as soon thought, that, if we had hired a boat to take us to Westminster, the boatman would consider his fee a payment of his fare to Windsor. Surely, surely, barristers are not so ignorant of the value of money as to sell their consciences for nothing!

But again, considering the question under another aspect. We will admit with the noble and learned Lord, who takes this original view of the potency of a fee, that "barristers are men, and are not to be unnecessarily or extravagantly lauded;" but still we have been taught that they are men educated, carefully, sedulously trained to cultivate and cherish a nice sense of honour; we have been led to conceive that that honour was to the barrister the breath of his nostrils, and that he would not easily permit a paltry fee to obliterate his sense of it. We have known instances in abundance of barristers refusing fees rather than break in upon some comparatively trivial rule of etiquette, and surely the breach of a high political duty must be thought as stringent on the sense of honour of a barrister, as the mere etiquette of his profession.

We had thought even that we could name instances where counsel had been so placed, that their duty of expressing and recording their opinions as Members of the Legislature conflicted with their duty as counsel, and yet they had done both. We had fancied we had read of a late celebrated trial for high treason, in which a great lawyer was retained to defend, as a lawyer, men whose acts and doctrines, as a man and a legislator, he notoriously abhorred. And we had fancied that the result of that transaction was, that the eminent individual to whom we allude, did his duty both to his clients and the public.—But we must have been mistaken. A barrister, it seems, when he accepts a retainer, is bought body and soul. The gold is to his honour what nitro-muriatic acid is to the gold, an irresistible solvent.

There is, it must be observed, some little discrepancy between the different portions of the argument of the noble and learned lord who is so desirous to protect the public against the weakness of the Bar, and the Bar against their own weakness. He is reported, in another part of his speech, to have said, that, "as a member of the Legislature, counsel ought to act in conformity with his own opinion. As a counsel, his private opinion was of no importance whatever; he was to be governed by the instructions he had received from his client, and was to do the best he could for the interests of his client." Now, if this is the doctrine, and we do not dispute it, it seems to assume, that the client bargains merely for the legal services of the barrister, without any reference to his private opinions. And on what ground then is he, by giving a retainer to a barrister to plead for or against a bill before the House of Lords, to assume, that the barrister is to be influenced by that retainer in any thing beyond the specific legal service for which it is given? If he knows that his counsel has two duties, and if he knows, as he certainly does, that the retainer is prima facie merely a retainer to perform one of those duties, on what ground is he to assume or expect, or how can it be supposed that he does in fact expect, that, by giving it, he binds the counsel not only to perform the one, but to neglect the other? It strikes our apprehension, that the doctrine thus stated by the learned lord puts him out of court as to his other implied doctrine; for if the party paying for a particular service has no ground to expect, and is not in fact supposed to expect from the party paid, some other particular service, where is the pressure, the inducement to the payee to do that other particular service for which he is not paid? The noble and learned lord may be right in his apprehensions, that barristers cannot set their honour against the glitter of a fee; though, if he is, we think the sooner the Bar is entirely swept away from the face of society the better.—He may be right in thinking that they cannot resist temptation; but we think he has failed in showing, that, in the particular case to which his motion was addressed, there is any temptation for them to resist.

ON SECURITIES ON LAND IN CONNEXION WITH BILL TRANSACTIONS AND THE USURY LAWS.

Many of our readers are aware that attempts have been made and are making to evade that small remnant of the usury laws which is still in vigour, and which prohibits the taking of usurious interest upon real security; and they are also aware that serious doubt has been entertained as to the legal success of such attempts. The device most in favour, and that to which we shall confine our remarks, is to borrow, not money but the use of a name that stands well in the money market, and to give an indemnity against the consequences of lending it by security upon real estate; and then to carry that name into the market and obtain advances upon such terms as can be made. Thus, (whose name ranks "A. 1" on the Exchange) agrees with B. to accept his bills, on condition that B. undertakes to provide for them when due, and deposits with A. title deeds, or gives him some other real security for the performance of his undertaking. The bill thus obtained is of course discounted on much more favourable terms than would have been obtained had B. relied on his own credit alone. The proceeding is sometimes varied in a manner that is supposed to make it safer, by making A. place his name upon the bill, not as acceptor, but as indorser; so that the bill is good in the first instance, whatever may be the legality of the subsequent proceedings. We will first discuss the simple case, where the security is given to the acceptor at the time of his acceptance.

In the supposed case, the intention may be, either that the drawer shall provide for the bill when due, or that he shall not. If the first course is intended, the commission paid to the acceptor will be a remuneration for his trouble, and may also be supposed to include an insurance against the risk which he runs, that the drawer will not be able to perform his engagements. Is this usury? The stat. 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37 has suspended the usury laws, with a proviso that nothing therein contained "shall extend to the loan or forbearance of any money upon security of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any estate or interest therein." So that every contract in which a security upon land is involved remains subject, as to the question of usury, to the old law, and may be discussed as if the stat. of Victoria had never passed. The stat. of Anne enacts, "that no person upon any contract take, directly or indirectly, for loan of any monies, wares, merchandise or other commodities, above the value of 5*l.* the forbearance of 100*l.* for a year; and that all bonds, contracts, and assurances whatsoever, for payment of any principal or money to be lent on covenant to be performed upon or for any usury, whereupon or whereby there shall be reserved or taken above the rate of 6*l.* in the 100*l.* as aforesaid, shall be utterly void." Now the transaction under consideration is obviously no loan in the first instance, and can never become so unless the terms of the contract are broken; and it seems to be clear that no commission that is paid to the acceptor can be usurious, any more than a payment to a person in consideration of his joining as surety in a bond is usurious. Nothing is lent but the name of the acceptor.

* We may remark that the dictum of Lord Cottenham in Whitworth v. Gaugain (ante, vol. 5, p. 523) has materially diminished the confidence which was placed in equitable mortgages; while the doctrine of Jones v. Jones, (ante, p. 61), while uncontradicted, gives to incumbrancers upon personal estate a material advantage over incumbrancers on equitable interests in realty.

† Where there is a loan, anything paid in consideration of the risk of losing the principal is interest; but here, the risk is, not that the money will be lost, but that it will be lent; a very different thing.

If there is usury, there must be a rate of interest for the forbearance of money for a certain time; but here there is nothing like interest; and if the commission is to be treated as interest, there are no data from which to calculate the rate. It is obvious that the inconvenience and risk to the acceptor may be greater in proportion as the date of the bill is shorter; and that he would be likely (except under special circumstances) to charge a higher commission for accepting a bill at two months, than for a bill at twelve. It is impossible therefore to say, that the commission is a remuneration for forbearance in respect of time. Now, suppose that in fact the drawer of the bill fails to provide for it at maturity, and that the acceptor having paid the bill does not receive his money back before the expiration of a year, and that he then receives it with interest at 5l. per cent. The right to interest for the time subsequent to the maturity of the bill (assuming for argument's sake that the transaction is lawful) being a legal consequence of the contract, may be treated as part of it, and as being bargained for, just as much as the commission is bargained for. But it is evident that the commission cannot be added to the interest so as to increase it beyond the legal amount; for the commission is not to depend at all upon the time of payment; it is to be paid in any event, even although no loan whatever takes place; and it is not to be increased, although the loan should in the result continue for six years. There is therefore no contract for a payment of excessive interest in consideration of the forbearance of money; what is paid is not paid in consideration of forbearance in any sense. Is the case altered by supposing that the nonpayment of the bill by the drawer was expected by both parties in the first instance; and that the amount of commission was greater than it would have been had this temporary insolvency not been anticipated? Suppose a premium of 5l. given to A. for accepting a bill drawn by B. for 100l. at three months. Here, the evident expectation is, that A. will advance money for some time at any rate to the use of B.; and however short or however long a time A. may allow to elapse before he enforces payment, he will receive more than 5l. per cent. for the use of his money, if the law allows him to recover it at all. Suppose that A. recovers the amount of the bill from B. at the end of six months from the time of his paying it, he will then, deducting a commission, say of 1l. per cent., for trouble, have received rather more than 14l. per cent. upon the advance: certainly as hard a bargain as the clearest case of usury could be. By enforcing an earlier payment, he would gain a still more extravagant rate of interest. But the hardship of the case does not make it usury; a post obit bond, the purchase of an annuity, or even the sale of a suit of clothes, may be much harder than any transaction within the statute of Anne, and yet be perfectly legal. Indeed, it is peculiar to such laws as these that they generally give rise, by evasions which it is impossible to prevent, to impositions and dealings far more oppressive than those against which they are directed.

This conclusion from general reasoning appears to be consistent with the general course of the authorities, among which (with the exception perhaps of Kent v. Lazen, to be noticed presently) there is no case to be found deciding that that is usury where the supposed borrower may be called upon to return the principal at any moment, while the supposed lender receives the same consideration whether he leaves the money outstanding a year or only an hour. Wherever the usury laws have been held to apply, either the borrower has stipulated for a certain period of accommodation, or, if the period has been left to the will of the lender, his forbearance has been secured by an agreement to pay usurious interest in proportion to the time. On the other hand, there is no distinct authority in favour of the legality of such a transaction as that under consideration. In an action upon the statute of Anne, to recover penalties for usury, the declaration stated, that the defendant forbore a sum of money from the 20th April; but it appeared, that, on the 20th, the loan was made, by sending bankers' cheques by the post, without any agreement to consider them as money, which cheques were not received until the following day. Lord Ellenborough held that the variance was fatal—"For civil purposes, the loan might be complete on the 20th, but in a criminal proceeding, can we say that the defendant forbore the money from that day, when it was then uncertain whether it ever would be received? Suppose he has charged for what he never lent, he may be liable for a fraud, not for usury. Perhaps he was not wrong in claiming interest from the 20th for commercial purposes, but before the forbearance begins which is to subject a man to penalties for usury, cash notes advanced must have become available, the money must have been grasped by the person to whom it is forborne. When I accommodate a man with a cheque upon my banker, there may be a loan for which interest is due. Till the money is actually received under it, there is no forbearance within the meaning of this statute." A rule for a new trial on the ground of misdirection was refused. (Brooks v. Middleton, 1 Camp. 445). Lord Ellenborough's distinction between civil and penal actions is not very intelligible. The only distinction recognised in other cases has been that which is expressed by the statute itself, namely, that an agreement to pay usurious interest is sufficient to avoid the entire contract, while, to constitute the offence, there must be, besides the corrupt agreement, an actual taking of the interest. (See Ferrill v. Shaen, 1 Wms. Saund. 249, 395).

A subsequent case before Lord Ellenborough raised the exact point, but the circumstances enabled his Lordship to place his decision on a different ground. In that case, (Masterman v. Cownie, 3 Camp. 488), Brome, a merchant in London, applied in October, 1811, to the plaintiff's bankers in London to accept bills for him at short dates, for which he was to provide when due; and it was accordingly agreed, that such bills should be drawn by some person procured by him; that the plaintiffs should accept them; that Brome should always provide for them before they became due; that as security he should deposit with the plaintiffs good bills at long dates to a larger amount; and that the plaintiffs should receive a commission of 5s. per cent. upon the bills accepted and paid by them, for their trouble. After some dealings on those terms, the plaintiffs expressing themselves dissatisfied with the manner in which the bills were drawn, and requiring them to be drawn by some respectable person in the country, Brome agreed that W. M., a banker in Yorkshire, named by the plaintiffs, should draw the bills, and that he would allow him a commission of 1s. per cent. for so doing. The bills so drawn were always provided for by Brome until he became bankrupt in September, 1812. Afterwards, the plaintiffs were obliged to take up bills accepted for him, and for which he had not provided funds. The question arose upon their seeking to prove for the amount of bills deposited by Brome as security, against the estate of the bankrupt acceptors; and an issue was directed by the Chancellor to try the question of usury. A verdict was given for the plaintiffs. Lord Ellenborough said—"The first question is, whether there was a contract for a loan. If there was, there may be usury to vitiate the debt, or to cut down the securities, although no advance took place till after Brome's bankruptcy, upon which no interest was charged. There must be an actual loan and a receipt of usurious interest to render a party liable to penalties, but if there be a stipulation for more than 5l. per cent. upon a contemplated advance, the agreement is usurious, and no transactions under it can bar the foundation of a valid debt. Here however nothing appears to have been anticipated to be done by the plaintiffs beyond the acceptance and payment of the bills. They never were in advance to Brome till after his bankruptcy, and there seems no reason to suppose that a loan of money was ever in their thoughts. If so, the commission of 5s. per cent. could not be for forbearance, and could not be the foundation of usury. The only question arising out of the 1s. allowed to the drawer is, whether that was a colour for usury. If it was bona fide applied to W. M.'s use it cannot be usurious, and may be entirely removed from the consideration of the case. Then may not the 5s. be accounted for on the score of the trouble which the plaintiffs had in accepting and paying the bills, in receiving the funds for that purpose, and in taking care of the securities deposited with them? It has been decided, that country bankers may charge a commission beyond the 5l. per cent. for the money advanced. Instead of the expression 'country bankers,' I prefer a description of the thing done. Before all mercantile transactions were carried on by means of a paper circulation, country bankers were at a great charge in procuring cash. It was a sort of foreign commodity which they had to import, therefore in conveying and insuring it they incurred a great collateral expense. If, under these circumstances, they were allowed only 5l. per cent. on the whole transaction, they might have received only 4l. 10s. for the forbearance of the money advanced. A similar expense may be incurred every where, by keeping clerks and a counting-house on purpose to accept and pay bills with funds provided by the persons for whom the business is done. In all these cases it is necessary to detach the trouble of keeping accounts from the interest for the forbearance of money. I remember an issue being tried by this court at Chester, whether 5s. per cent. was a fair commission upon the discount of bills there, and it was found to be so. I agree with what the Chancellor is stated to have said in directing the present issue, that unless there be an eventual advance of money contemplated, there can be no usury. Here the advance of money was not the substance of the contract. It was never mentioned among the parties, and never happened till the close of the transactions, when no interest was charged upon it. Had an advance been made, I should have left it to the jury whether the commission was a shift for obtaining more than legal interest for the forbearance of the money. But if an advance was neither made nor contemplated, the commission can be considered only a compensation for services performed."

Lord Ellenborough's opinion, therefore, was distinctly against the legality of any such agreement, where, either from the fact of an advance being made, or from the excessive amount of the sum paid under the name of commission, it must be inferred that the commission was not intended wholly as a remuneration for services performed, but partly as something in addition to legal interest for a contemplated advance.

In Kent v. Lowen, (1 Camp. 177), the defence to an action by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note was, that it had been given to the payees, Messrs. Coates, under an agreement that they would accommodate him with their acceptance at three months upon receiving his note for the same sum at ninety days, together with 2l. 10s. per cent. commission; and Lord Ellenborough held, that there was no colour for commission, but that the 2l. 10s. per cent. must be considered as usurious interest. Country bankers had been allowed to take, besides legal interest, a certain commission for their trouble and expense, but that was in discounting bills. Here Coates & Co. were acceptors of a bill, and the commission was a mere cloak for usury. It is difficult to reconcile this judgment with what has been already cited from the same learned judge in Masterton v. Cowrie; and still more difficult to reconcile the decision with the principle of the more recent case of Stovell v. Eade, (12 J. B. Moore, 277), where a country banker gave his draft on his London agent, payable at two months, in exchange for a country bill of the same date, deducting, in the name of commission, a sum equal to 4l. per cent. for the time the bill had to run. It was held clearly not usurious. Park, J., said, "It appears to me, that there was no loan in this case, but a mere exchange of bills; the plaintiffs were clearly entitled to a commission for their trouble and risk in remitting cash to London." But Best, C. J., said, "If they had taken more than 5l. per cent., it might have been a question whether the transaction was not a colour for usury; but as only about 4l. per cent. was taken, there is no pretence for saying that it was within the Statute of Usury." If it was not a loan, how could the amount of the commission make any difference in the nature of the transaction? The party who took the draft might have legally paid 5l. per cent. to a third person for discounting it; and if one person might receive that discount, any other person might do so. Suppose the draft to have been taken the next day to the drawers of it, might they not legally have discounted it, and received 5l. per cent. for doing so, (Barclay v. Walmsley, 4 East, 57), making, with their previous commission, 9l. per cent.? This is not any argument against the dictum of Best, C. J., but it shews how much the question of usury is governed by the form, and how little by the substance of the transaction.

Upon the authorities, therefore, the validity of the transaction we have supposed, as between the parties themselves and all others having notice, seems to be at least doubtful. In the hands of innocent holders the bill would of course be good, (Stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41); and, as we have said, upon principle it would seem to be equally good between the parties themselves.

When the commission is paid and the landed security given upon the loan of a name by way of indorsement, instead of by acceptance, the remedy upon the bill of course remains unaffected, while the question as to the validity of the security, and the claims of a subsequent indorsee with notice, is the same as that which we have already discussed.

CAP. XXXIX.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Advances bona fide made to Agents intrusted with Goods. [30th June, 1842.]

Whereas by an act passed in the 6 Geo. 4, [c. 94], intituled "An Act to alter and amend an Act for the better Protection of the Property of Merchants and others who may hereafter enter into Contracts or Agreements in relation to Goods, Wares, and Merchandize intrusted to Factors or Agents," validity is given, under certain circumstances, to contracts or agreements made with persons intrusted with and in possession of the documents of title to goods and merchandize, and consignees making advances to persons abroad who are intrusted with any goods and merchandize, are entitled, under certain circumstances, to a lien thereon, but under the said act and the present state of the law, advances cannot safely be made upon goods or documents to persons known to have possession thereof as agents only: And whereas by the said act it is amongst other things further enacted, "that it shall be lawful to and for any person to contract with any agent intrusted with any goods, or to whom the same may be assigned, for the purchase of any such goods, and to receive the same of and to pay for the same to such agent, and such contract and payment shall be binding upon and good against the owner of such goods, notwithstanding such person shall have notice that the person making such contract, or on whose behalf such contract is made, is an agent; provided such contract or payment be made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that such person shall not, when such contract is entered into or payment made, have notice that such agent is not authorized to sell the same, or to receive the said purchase-money:" And whereas advances on the security of goods and merchandize have become an usual and ordinary course of business, and it is expedient and necessary that reasonable and safe facilities should be afforded thereto, and that the same protection and validity should be extended to bonâ fide advances upon goods and merchandize as by the said recited act is given to sales, and that owners intrusting agents with the possession of goods and merchandize, or of documents of title thereto, should in all cases where such owners by the said recited act or otherwise would be bound by a contract or agreement of sale be in like manner bound by any contract or agreement of pledge or lien for any advances bonâ fide made on the security thereof: And whereas much litigation has arisen on the construction of the said recited act, and the same does not extend to protect exchanges of securities bonâ fide made, and so much uncertainty exists in respect thereof that it is expedient to alter and amend the same, and to extend the provisions thereof, and to put the law on a clear and certain basis: Be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this act any agent who shall thereafter be intrusted with the possession of goods, or of the documents of title to goods, shall be deemed and taken to be owner of such goods and documents, so far as to give validity to any contract or agreement by way of pledge, lien, or security bonâ fide made by any person with such agent so intrusted as aforesaid, as well for any original loan, advance, or payment made upon the security of such goods or documents, as also for any further or continuing advance in respect thereof, and such contract or agreement shall be binding upon and good against the owner of such goods, and all other persons interested therein, notwithstanding the person claiming such pledge or lien may have had notice that the person with whom such contract or agreement is made is only an agent.

2. That where any such contract or agreement for pledge, lien, or security shall be made in consideration of the delivery or transfer to such agent of any other goods or merchandize, or document of title, or negotiable security, upon which the person so delivering up the same had at the time a valid and available lien and security for or in respect of a previous advance by virtue of some contract or agreement made with such agent, such contract and agreement, if bonâ fide on the part of the person with whom the same may be made, shall be deemed to be a contract made in consideration of an advance within the true intent and meaning of this act, and shall be as valid and effectual, to all intents and purposes and to the same extent as if the consideration for the same had been a bonâ fide present advance of money: Provided always, that the lien acquired under such last-mentioned contract or agreement upon the goods or documents deposited in exchange shall not exceed the value at the time of the goods and merchandize which, or the documents of title to which, or the negotiable security which shall be delivered up and exchanged.

3. That this act, and every matter and thing herein contained, shall be deemed and construed to give validity to such contracts and agreements only, and to protect only such loans, advances and exchanges, as shall be made bonâ fide, and without notice that the agent making such contracts or agreements as aforesaid has not authority to make the same, or is acting malâ fide in respect thereof against the owner of such goods and merchandize; and nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend to or protect any lien or pledge for or in respect of any antecedent debt owing from any agent to any person with or to whom such lien or pledge shall be given, nor to authorize any agent intrusted as aforesaid in deviating from any express orders or authority received from the owner; but that for the purpose and to the intent of protecting all such bonâ fide loans, advances, and exchanges as aforesaid, (though made with notice of such agent not being the owner, but without any notice of the agent's acting without authority), and to no further or other intent or purpose, such contract or agreement as aforesaid shall be binding on the owner and all other persons interested in such goods.

4. That any bill of lading, India warrant, dock warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, warrant, or order for the delivery of goods, or any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or authorizing or purporting to authorize, either by indorsement or by delivery, the possessor of such document to transfer or receive goods thereby represented, shall be deemed and taken to be a document of title within the meaning of this act; and any agent intrusted as aforesaid, and possessed of any such document of title, whether derived immediately from the owner of such goods, or obtained by reason of such agent's having been intrusted with the possession of the goods, or of any other document of title thereto, shall be deemed and taken to have been intrusted with the possession of the goods represented by such document of title as aforesaid, and all contracts pledging or giving a lien upon such document of title as aforesaid shall be deemed and taken to be respectively pledges of and liens upon the goods to which the same relates; and such agent shall be deemed to be possessed of such goods or documents, whether the same shall be in his actual custody, or shall be held by any other person subject to his control or for him or on his behalf; and where any loan or advance shall be bonâ fide made to any agent intrusted with and in possession of any such goods or documents of title as aforesaid, on the faith of any contract or agreement in writing to consign, deposit, transfer, or deliver such goods or documents of title as aforesaid, and such goods or documents of title shall actually be received by the person making such loan or advance, without notice that such agent was not authorized to make such pledge or security, every such loan or advance shall be deemed and taken to be a loan or advance on the security of such goods or documents of title within the meaning of this act, though such goods or documents of title shall not actually be received by the person making such loan or advance till the period subsequent thereto; and any contract or agreement, whether made direct with such agent as aforesaid, or with any clerk or other person on his behalf, shall be deemed a contract or agreement with such agent; and any payment made, whether by money or bills of exchange, or other negotiable security, shall be deemed and taken to be an advance within the meaning of this act; and an agent in possession as aforesaid of such goods or documents shall be taken, for the purposes of this act, to have been intrusted therewith by the owner thereof, unless the contrary can be shewn in evidence.

5. That nothing herein contained shall lessen, vary, alter, or affect the civil responsibility of an agent for any breach of duty or contract, or non-fulfilment of his orders or authority, in respect of any such contract, agreement, lien, or pledge as aforesaid.

6. That if any agent intrusted as aforesaid shall, contrary to or without the authority of his principal in that behalf, for his own benefit and in violation of good faith, make any consignment, deposit, transfer, or delivery of any goods or documents of title so intrusted to him as aforesaid, as and by way of a pledge, lien, or security; or shall, contrary to or without such authority, for his own benefit and in violation of good faith, accept any advance on the faith of any contract or agreement to consign, deposit, transfer, or deliver such goods or documents of title as aforesaid; every such agent shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof, shall be sentenced to transportation for any term not exceeding fourteen years nor less than seven years, or to suffer such other punishment by fine or imprisonment, or by both, as the court shall award; and every clerk or other person who shall knowingly and wilfully act and assist in making any such consignment, deposit, transfer, or delivery, or in accepting or procuring such advance as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to any of the punishments which the court shall award, as hereinbefore last mentioned: Provided nevertheless, that no such agent shall be liable to any prosecution for consigning, depositing, transferring, or delivering any such goods or documents of title, in case the same shall not be made a security for or subject to the payment of any greater sum of money than the amount which at the time of such consignment, deposit, transfer, or delivery was justly due and owing to such agent from his principal, together with the amount of any bills of exchange drawn by or on account of such principal, and accepted by such agent: Provided also, that the conviction of any such agent so convicted as aforesaid shall not be received in evidence in any action at law or suit in equity against him, and no agent intrusted as aforesaid shall be liable to be convicted by any evidence whatsoever in respect of any act done by him, if he shall, at any time previously to his being indicted for such offence, have disclosed such act, on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity in any action, suit, or proceeding which shall have been bona fide instituted by any party aggrieved, or if he shall have disclosed the same in any examination or deposition before any commissioner of bankrupt.

7. That nothing herein contained shall prevent such owner as aforesaid from having the right to redeem such goods or documents of title pledged as aforesaid, at any time before such goods shall have been sold, upon re-payment of the amount of the lien thereon, or restoration of the securities in respect of which such lien may exist, and upon payment or satisfaction to such agent, if by him required, of any sum of money for or in respect of which such agent would by law be entitled to retain the same goods or documents, or any of them, by way of lien as against such owner, or to prevent the said owner from recovering of and from such person with whom any such goods or documents may have been pledged, or who shall have any such lien thereon as aforesaid, any balance or sum of money remaining in his hands as the produce of the sale of such goods, after deducting the amount of the lien of such person under such contract or agreement as aforesaid: Provided always, that in case of the bankruptcy of any such agent the owner of the goods which shall have been so redeemed by such owner as aforesaid shall, in respect of the sum paid by him on account of such agent for such redemption, be held to have paid such sum for the use of such agent before his bankruptcy, or in case the goods shall not be so redeemed the owner shall be deemed a creditor of such agent for the value of the goods so pledged at the time of the pledge, and shall, if he shall think fit, be entitled in either of such cases to prove for or set off the sum so paid, or the value of such goods, as the case may be.

8. That in construing this act the word "person" shall be taken to designate a body corporate or company as well as an individual; and that words in the singular number shall, when necessary to give effect to the intention of the said act, import also the plural, and vice versa; and words used in the masculine gender shall, when required, be taken to apply to a female as well as a male.

9. That nothing herein contained shall be construed to give validity to or in anywise to affect any contract, agreement, lien, pledge, or other act, matter, or thing made or done before the passing of this act.

An Act for better and more effectually carrying into effect Treaties and Conventions with Foreign States for suppressing the Slave Trade. [30th June, 1842.]

CAP. XLIII.

An Act to confirm certain Proceedings which may have been had after the passing of the Act intituled "An Act to define the Jurisdiction of Justices in General and Quarter Sessions of the Peace." [1st July, 1842.]

Whereas an act was passed in the 5 & 6 Vict. [c. 83,] intituled "An Act to define the Jurisdiction of Justices in General and Quarter Sessions of the Peace," whereby the justices act in and for any county, riding, division, or liberty, and the recorder of any borough, are restrained from trying persons charged with certain offences in the said act mentioned: And whereas sessions of the peace may have been holden and trial had of persons charged with some of the offences mentioned in the said act before the justices at any such session, or the recorder, shall have had notice of the said act having received the royal assent: Be it therefore enacted, &c., That any trial which may have been had of any person for any offence mentioned in the said act at any session of the peace after the passing of the said act, or which may be had before the 15th July, in the present year, and all proceedings relative to any such trial and consequent thereon, shall be as good, valid, and effectual in law to all intents and purposes as if the said act had not been passed; any thing in the said act to the contrary notwithstanding.

CAP. XLIV.

An Act for the Transfer of Licences and Regulation of Public Houses. [1st July, 1842.]

CAP. XLV.

An Act to amend the Law of Copyright. [1st July, 1842.]

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law relating to copy right, and to afford greater encouragement to the production of literary works of lasting benefit to the world: Be it enacted &c., That from the passing of this act an act passed in the 1 Anne, [c. 19,] intituled "An Act for the Encouragement of Learning, by vesting the Copies of printed Books in the Authors or Purchasers of such Copies during the Times therein mentioned;" and also an act passed in the 41 Geo. 3, [c. 107,] intituled "An Act for the further Encouragement of Learning in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, by securing the Copies and Copyright of printed Books to the Authors of such Books or their Assigns, for the Time therein mentioned;" and also an act passed in the 54 Geo. 3, [c. 156,] intituled "An Act to amend the several Acts for the Encouragement of Learning, by securing the Copies and Copyright of printed Books to the Authors of such Books, or their Assigns," be and the same are hereby repealed, except so far as the continuance of either of them may be necessary for carrying on or giving effect to any proceedings at law or in equity pending at the time of passing this act, or for enforcing any cause of action or suit, or any right of contract, then subsisting.

2. That in the construction of this act the word "book" shall be construed to mean and include every volume, part or division of a volume, pamphlet, sheet of letter-press, sheet of music, map, chart, or plan separately published; that the words "dramatic piece" shall be construed to mean and include every tragedy, comedy, play, opera, farce, or other scenic, musical, or dramatic entertainment; that the word "copyright" shall be construed to mean the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject to which the said word is herein applied; that the words "personal representative" shall be construed to mean and include every executor, administrator, and next of kin entitled to administration; that the word "assigns" shall be construed to mean and include every person in whom the interest of an author in copyright shall be vested, whether derived from such author before or after the publication of any book, and whether acquired by sale, gift, bequest, or by operation of law, or otherwise; that the words "British dominions" shall be construed to mean and include all parts of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Islands of Jersey and Guernsey, all parts of the East and West Indies, and all the colonies, settlements, and possessions of the crown which now are or hereafter may be acquired; and that whenever in this act, in describing any person, matter, or thing, the word importing the singular number or the masculine gender only is used, the same shall be understood to include and to be applied to several persons as well as one person, and females as well as males, and several matters or things as well as one matter or thing, respectively, unless there shall be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

3. That the copyright in every book which shall after the passing of this act be published in the lifetime of its author shall endure for the natural life of such author, and for the further term of seven years, commencing at the time of his death, and shall be the property of such author and his assigns: Provided always, that if the said term of seven years shall expire before the end of forty-two years from the first publication of such book, the copyright shall in that case endure for such period of forty-two years; and that the copyright in every book which shall be published after the death of its author shall endure for the term of forty-two years from the first publication thereof, and shall be the property of the proprietor of the author's manuscript from which such book shall be first published, and his assigns.

4. And whereas it is just to extend the benefits of this act to authors of books published before the passing thereof, and in which copyright still subsists; be it enacted, That the copyright which at the time of passing this act shall subsist in any book theretofore published (except as hereinafter mentioned) shall be extended and endure for the full term provided by this act in cases of books thereafter published, and shall be the property of the person who at the time of passing of this act shall be the proprietor of such copyright: Provided always, that in all cases in which such copyright shall belong in whole or in part to a publisher or other person who shall have acquired it for other consideration than that of natural love and affection, such copyright shall not be extended by this act, but shall endure for the term which shall subsist therein at the time of passing of this act, and no longer, unless the author of such book, if he shall be living, or the personal representative of such author, if he shall be dead, and the proprietor of such copyright, shall, before the expiration of such term, consent and agree to accept the benefits of this act in respect of such book, and shall cause a minute of such consent in the form in that behalf given in the schedule to this act annexed to be entered in the book of registry hereinafter directed to be kept, in which case such copyright shall endure for the full term by this act provided in cases of books to be published after the passing of this act, and shall be the property of such person or persons as in such minute shall be expressed.

5. And whereas it is expedient to provide against the suppression of books of importance to the public; be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the judicial committee of her Majesty's Privy Council, on complaint made to them that the proprietor of the copyright in any book after the death of its author has refused to republish or to allow the republication of the same, and that by reason of such refusal such book may be withheld from the public, to grant a license to such complainant to publish such book, in such manner and subject to such conditions as they may think fit, and that it shall be lawful for such complainant to publish such book according to such license.

6. That a printed copy of the whole of every book which shall be published after the passing of this act, together with all maps, prints, or other engravings belonging thereto, finished and coloured in the same manner as the best copies of the same shall be published, and also of any second or subsequent edition which shall be so published with any additions or alterations, whether the same shall be in letter press, or in the maps, prints, or other engravings belonging thereto, and whether the first edition of such book shall have been published before or after the passing of this act, and also of any second or subsequent edition of every book of which the first or some preceding edition shall not have been delivered for the use of the British Museum, bound, sewed, or stitched together, and upon the best paper on which the same shall be printed, shall, within one calendar month after the day on which any such book shall first be sold, published, or offered for sale within the bills of mortality, or within three calendar months if the same shall first be sold, published, or offered for sale in any other part of the United Kingdom, or within twelve calendar months after the same shall first be sold, published, or offered for sale in any other part of the British dominions, be delivered, on behalf of the publisher thereof, at the British Museum.

7. That every copy of any book which under the provisions of this act ought to be delivered as aforesaid, shall be delivered at the British Museum between the hours of ten in the forenoon and four in the afternoon on any day except Sunday, Ash Wednesday, Good Friday, and Christmas Day, to one of the officers of the said Museum, or to some person authorized by the trustees of the said Museum to receive the same, and such officer or other person receiving such copy is hereby required to give a receipt in writing for the same, and such delivery shall to all intents and purposes be deemed to be good and sufficient delivery under the provisions of this act.

8. That a copy of the whole of every book, and of any second or subsequent edition of every book containing additions and alterations, together with all maps and prints belonging thereto, which after the passing of this act shall be published, shall, on demand thereof in writing, left at the place of abode of the publisher thereof at any time within twelve months next after the publication thereof, under the hand of the officer of the Company of Stationers who shall from time to time be appointed by the said Company for the purposes of this act, or under the hand of any other person thereto authorized by the persons or bodies politic and corporate, proprietors and managers of the libraries following, (videlicet), the Bodleian Library at Oxford, the Public Library at Cambridge, the Library of the Faculty of Advocates at Edinburgh, the Library of the College of the Holy and Undivided Trinity of Queen Elizabeth near Dublin, be delivered, upon the paper of which the largest number of copies of such book or edition shall be printed for sale, in the like condition as the copies prepared for sale by the publisher thereof respectively, within one month after demand made thereof in writing as aforesaid, to the said officer of the said Company of Stationers for the time being, which copies the said officer shall and he is hereby required to receive at the hall of the said Company, for the use of the library for which such demand shall be made within such twelve months as aforesaid; and the said officer is hereby required to give a receipt in writing for the same, and within one month after any such book shall be so delivered to him as aforesaid to deliver the same for the use of such library.

9. That if any publisher shall be desirous of delivering the copy of such book as shall be demanded on behalf of any of the said libraries at such library, it shall be lawful for him to deliver the same at such library, free of expense, to such librarian or other person authorized to receive the same (who is hereby required in such case to receive and give a receipt in writing for the same), and such delivery shall to all intents and purposes of this act be held as equivalent to a delivery to the said officer of the Stationers Company.

10. That if any publisher of any such book, or of any second or subsequent edition of any such book, shall neglect to deliver the same, pursuant to this act, he shall for every such default forfeit, besides the value of such copy of such book or edition which he ought to have delivered, a sum not exceeding five pounds, to be recovered by the librarian or other officer (properly authorized) of the library for the use whereof such copy should have been delivered, in a summary way, on conviction before two justices of the peace for the county or place where the publisher making default shall reside, or by action of debt or other proceeding of the like nature, at the suit of such librarian or other officer, in any court of record in the United Kingdom, in which action, if the plaintiff shall obtain a verdict, he shall recover his costs reasonably incurred, to be taxed as between attorney and client.

11. That a book of registry, wherein may be registered, as hereinafter enacted, the proprietorship in the copyright of books, and assignments thereof, and in dramatic and musical pieces, whether in manuscript or otherwise, and licences affecting such copyright, shall be kept at the hall of the Stationers Company, by the officer appointed by the said Company for the purposes of this act, and shall at all convenient times be open to the inspection of any person, on payment of one shilling for every entry which shall be searched for or inspected in the said book; and that such officer shall, whenever thereunto reasonably required, give a copy of any entry in such book, certified under his hand, and impressed with the stamp of the said Company, to be provided by them for that purpose and which they are hereby required to provide, to any person requiring the same, on payment to him of the sum of five shillings; and such copies so certified and impressed shall be received in evidence in all courts, and in all summary proceedings, and shall be prima facie proof of the proprietorship or assignment of copyright or licence as therein expressed, but subject to be rebutted by other evidence, and in the case of dramatic or musical pieces shall be prima facie proof of the right of representation or performance, subject to be rebutted as aforesaid.

12. That if any person shall wilfully make or cause to be made any false entry in the registry book of the Stationers Company, or shall wilfully produce or cause to be tendered in evidence any paper falsely purporting to be a copy of any entry in the said book, he shall be guilty of an indictable misdemeanor, and shall be punished accordingly.

13. That after the passing of this act it shall be lawful for the proprietor of copyright in any book heretofore published, or in any book hereafter to be published, to make entry in the registry book of the Stationers Company of the title of such book, the time of the first publication thereof, the name and place of abode of the publisher thereof, and the name and place of abode of the proprietor of the copyright of the said book, or of any portion of such copyright, in the form in that behalf given in the schedule to this act annexed, upon payment of the sum of five shillings to the officer of the said Company; and that it shall be lawful for every such registered proprietor to assign his interest, or any portion of his interest therein, by making entry in the said book of registry of such assignment, and of the name and place of abode of the assignee thereof, in the form given in that behalf in the said schedule, on payment of the like sum; and such assignment so entered shall be effectual in law to all intents and purposes whatsoever, without being subject to any stamp or duty, and shall be of the same force and effect as if such assignment had been made by deed.

14. That if any person shall deem himself aggrieved by any entry made under colour of this act in the said book of registry, it shall be lawful for such person to apply by motion to the Court of Queen's Bench, Court of Common Pleas, or Court of Exchequer, in term time, or to apply by summons to any judge of either of such courts in vacation, for an order that such entry may be expunged or varied; and that upon any such application by motion or summons to either of the said courts, or to a judge as aforesaid, such court or judge shall make such order for expunging, varying, or confirming such entry, either with or without costs, as to such court or judge shall seem just; and the officer appointed by the Stationers Company for the purposes of this act shall, on the production to him of any such order for expunging or varying any such entry, expunge or vary the same according to the requisitions of such order.

15. That if any person shall, in any part of the British dominions, after the passing of this act, print, or cause to be printed, either for sale or exportation, any book in which there shall be subsisting copyright, without the consent in writing of the proprietor thereof, or shall import for sale or hire any such book so having been unlawfully printed from parts beyond the sea, or, knowing such book to have been so unlawfully printed or imported, shall sell, publish, or expose to sale or hire, or cause to be sold, published, or exposed to sale or hire, or shall have in his possession, for sale or hire, any such book so unlawfully printed or imported, without such consent as aforesaid, such offender shall be liable to a special action on the case at the suit of the proprietor of such copyright, to be brought in any court of record in that part of the British dominions in which the offence shall be committed: Provided always, that in Scotland such offender shall be liable to an action in the court of session in Scotland, which shall and may be brought and prosecuted in the same manner in which any other action of damages to the like amount may be brought and prosecuted there.

16. That after the passing of this act, in any action brought within the British dominions against any person for printing any such book for sale, hire, or exportation, or for importing, selling, publishing, or exposing to sale or hire, or causing to be imported, sold, published, or exposed to sale or hire, any such book, the defendant, on pleading thereto, shall give to the plaintiff a notice in writing of any objections on which he means to rely on the trial of such action; and if the nature of his defence be, that the plaintiff in such action was not the author or first publisher of the book in which he shall by such action claim copyright, or is not the proprietor of the copyright therein, or that some other person than the plaintiff was the author or first publisher of such book, or is the proprietor of the copyright therein, then the defendant shall specify in such notice the name of the person who he alleges to have been the author or first publisher of such book, or the proprietor of the copyright therein, together with the title of such book, and the time when and the place where such book was first published, otherwise the defendant in such action shall not at the trial or hearing of such action be allowed to give any evidence that the plaintiff in such action was not the author or first publisher of the book in which he claims such copyright as aforesaid, or that he was not the proprietor of the copyright therein; and at such trial or hearing no other objection shall be allowed to be made on behalf of such defendant than the objections stated in such notice, or that any other person was the author or first publisher of such book, or the proprietor of the copyright therein, than the person specified in such notice, or give in evidence in support of his defence any other book than one substantially corresponding in title, time, and place of publication with the title, time, and place specified in such notice.

17. That after the passing of this act it shall not be lawful for any person, not being the proprietor of the copyright, or some person authorized by him, to import into any part of the United Kingdom, or into any other part of the British dominions, for sale or hire, any printed book first composed or written or printed and published in any part of the said United Kingdom, wherein there shall be copyright, and reprinted in any country or place whatsoever out of the British dominions; and if any person, not being such proprietor or person authorized as aforesaid, shall import or bring, or cause to be imported or brought, for sale or hire, any such printed book into any part of the British dominions, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, or shall knowingly sell, publish, or expose to sale or let to hire, or have in his possession for sale or hire, any such book, then every such book shall be forfeited, and shall be seized by any officer of customs or excise, and the same shall be destroyed by such officer; and every person so offending, being duly convicted thereof before two justices of the peace for the county or place in which such book shall be found, shall also for every such offence forfeit the sum of 10*l.*, and double the value of every copy of such book which he shall so import or cause to be imported into any part of the British dominions, or shall knowingly sell, publish, or expose to sale or let to hire, or shall cause to be sold, published, or exposed to sale or let to hire, or shall have in his possession for sale or hire, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, 5*l.* to the use of such officer of customs or excise, and the remainder of the penalty to the use of the proprietor of the copyright in such book.

18. That when any publisher or other person shall, before or at the time of the passing of this act, have projected, conducted, and carried on, or shall hereafter project, conduct, and carry on, or be the proprietor of any encyclopædia, review, magazine, periodical work, or work published in a series of books or parts, or any book whatsoever, and shall have employed or shall employ any persons to compose the same, or any volumes, parts, essays, articles, or portions thereof, for publication in or as part of the same, and such work, volumes, parts, essays, articles, or portions shall have been or shall hereafter be composed under such employment, on the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to such proprietor, projector, publisher, or conductor, and paid for by such proprietor, projector, publisher, or conductor, the copyright in every such encyclopædia, review, magazine, periodical work, and work published in a series of books or parts, and in every volume, part, essay, article, and portion so composed and paid for, shall be the property of such proprietor, projector, publisher, or other conductor, who shall enjoy the same rights as if he were the actual author thereof, and shall have such term of copyright therein as is given to the authors of books by this act; except only that in the case of essays, articles, or portions forming part of and first published in reviews, magazines, or other periodical works of a like nature, after the term of twenty-eight years from the first publication thereof respectively, the right of publishing the same in a separate form shall revert to the author for the remainder of the term given by this act: Provided always, that during the term of twenty-eight years the said proprietor, projector, publisher, or conductor shall not publish any such essay, article, or portion separately or singly without the consent previously obtained of the author thereof, or his assigns: Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall alter or affect the right of any person who shall have been or who shall be so employed as aforesaid to publish any such his composition in a separate form, who by any contract, express or implied, may have reserved or may hereafter reserve to himself such right; but every author reserving, retaining, or having such right shall be entitled to the copyright in such composition when published in a separate form, according to this act, without prejudice to the right of such proprietor, projector, publisher, or conductor as aforesaid.

19. That the proprietor of the copyright in any encyclopædia, review, magazine, periodical work, or other work published in a series of books or parts, shall be entitled to all the benefits of the registration at Stationers Hall under this act, on entering in the said book of registry the title of such encyclopædia, review, periodical work, or other work published in a series of books or parts, the time of the first publication of the first volume, number, or part thereof, or of the first number or volume first published after the passing of this act in any such work which shall have been published heretofore, and the name and place of abode of the proprietor thereof, and of the publisher thereof, when such publisher shall not also be the proprietor thereof.

20. And whereas an act was passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, [c. 15.] to amend the law relating to dramatic literary property, and it is expedient to extend the term of the sole liberty of representing dramatic pieces given by that act to the full time by this act provided for the continuance of copyright: And whereas it is expedient to extend to musical compositions the benefits of that act, and also of this act; be it therefore enacted, That the provisions of the said act of his late Majesty, and of this act, shall apply to musical compositions, and that the sole liberty of representing or performing, or causing or permitting to be represented or performed, any dramatic piece or musical composition, shall endure and be the property of the author thereof, and his assigns, for the term in this act provided for the duration of copyright in books; and the provisions hereinbefore enacted in respect of the property of such copyright, and of registering the same, shall apply to the liberty of representing or performing any dramatic piece or musical composition, as if the same were herein expressly re-enacted and applied thereto, save and except that the first public representation or performance of any dramatic piece or musical composition shall be deemed equivalent, in the construction of this act, to the first publication of any book: Provided always, that in case of any dramatic piece or musical composition in manuscript, it shall be sufficient for the person having the sole liberty of representing or performing, or causing to be represented or performed the same, to register only the title thereof, the name and place of abode of the author or composer thereof, the name and place of abode of the proprietor thereof, and the time and place of its first representation or performance.

21. That the person who shall at any time have the sole liberty of representing such dramatic piece or musical composition shall have and enjoy the remedies given and provided in the said act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, [c. 15.] passed to amend the laws relating to dramatic literary property, during the whole of his interest therein, as fully as if the same were re-enacted in this act.

22. That no assignment of the copyright of any book consisting of or containing a dramatic piece or musical composition shall be holden to convey to the assignee the right of representing or performing such dramatic piece or musical composition, unless an entry in the said registry-book shall be made of such assignment, wherein shall be expressed the intention of the parties that such right should pass by such assignment.

23. That all copies of any book wherein there shall be copyright, and of which entry shall have been made in the said registry-book, and which shall have been unlawfully printed or imported without the consent of the registered proprietor of such copyright, in writing under his hand first obtained, shall be deemed to be the property of the proprietor of such copyright, and who shall be registered as such, and such registered proprietor shall, after demand thereof in writing, be entitled to sue for and recover the same, or damages for the detention thereof, in an action of detinue, from any party who shall detain the same, or to sue for and recover damages for the conversion thereof in an action of trover.

24. That no proprietor of copyright in any book which shall be first published after the passing of this act shall maintain any action or suit, at law or in equity, or any summary proceeding, in respect of any infringement of such copyright, unless he shall, before commencing such action, suit, or proceeding, have caused an entry to be made, in the book of registry of the Stationers Company, of such book, pursuant to this act: Provided always, that the omission to make such entry shall not affect the copyright in any book, but only the right to sue or proceed in respect of the infringement thereof as aforesaid: Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall prejudice the remedies which the proprietor of the sole liberty of representing any dramatic piece shall have by virtue of the act passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, to amend the laws relating to dramatic literary property, or of this act, although no entry shall be made in the book of registry aforesaid.

25. That all copyright shall be deemed personal property, and shall be transmissible by bequest, or, in case of intestacy, shall be subject to the same law of distribution as other personal property, and in Scotland shall be deemed to be personal and moveable estate.

26. That if any action or suit shall be commenced or brought against any person or persons whomsoever for doing or causing to be done anything in pursuance of this act, the defendant or defendants in such action may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and if upon such action a verdict shall be given for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuited, or discontinue his action, then the defendant shall have and recover his full costs, for which he shall have the same remedy as a defendant in any case by law made; and that all actions, suits, bills, indictments, or informations for any offence that shall be committed against this act shall be brought, sued, and commenced within twelve calendar months next after such offence committed, or else the same shall be void and of none effect; provided that such limitation of time shall not extend or be construed to extend to any actions, suits, or other proceedings which under the authority of this act shall or may be brought, sued, or commenced for or in respect of any copies of books to be delivered for the use of the British museum, or of any one of the four libraries hereinbefore mentioned.

27. That nothing in this act contained shall affect or alter the rights of the two universities of Oxford and Cambridge, the colleges or houses of learning within the same, the four universities in Scotland, the college of the Holy and Undivided Trinity of Queen Elizabeth near Dublin, and the several colleges of Eton, Westminster, and Winchester, in any copyrights heretofore and now vested or hereafter to be vested in such universities and colleges respectively, anything to the contrary herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

28. That nothing in this act contained shall affect, alter, or vary any right subsisting at the time of passing this act, except as herein expressly enacted; and all contracts, agreements, and obligations made and entered into before the passing of this act, and all remedies relating thereto, shall remain in full force, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

29. That this act shall extend to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and to every part of the British dominions.

30. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in the present session of parliament.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE PRACTICE OF LIFE ASSURANCE.

To Attorneys and Solicitors.

55, Chancery-lane, 9th April, 1842.

FOR the convenience of persons in the Western and Central Districts of London, and particularly of Gentlemen connected with the Law, THE LONDON, EDINBURGH, AND DUBLIN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY have opened a Branch Office at 55, Chancery-lane, where Prospectuses, Forms of Proposals, and every other information connected with the business of the Company, may be procured; and where Examinations of Parties whose Lives are proposed for Assurance may be taken and Policies effected, as at the Chief Office of the Company, in Charlotte-row, Mansion-house.

Your attention is solicited to some of the distinguishing features of this Company, which have been introduced after mature deliberation, and which will be most conveniently pointed out by referring to Policies, as Money Transaction and Provision Policies.

MONEY TRANSACTION POLICIES.—Your professional experience and acquaintance with the records of the Court of Law and Equity, must have convinced you that considerable changes were required in the practice and rules of Life Office to render this class of Policies valid and unimpeachable documents of security, which no unforeseen circumstances or future accidents could invalidate. This Company has endeavoured, and they think successfully, to render their Policies as indefeasible and negotiable securities as is possible, consistently with a due regard to the safety of the contracting parties; and to effect the object the Company has introduced the following clause into their Deed of Settlement:—

CLAUSE 78.—"That every Policy issued by the Company shall be indefeasible and indisputable, and the fact of the issue of the same shall be conclusive evidence of its validity; and it shall not be lawful for the Company to delay payment of the money assured thereby, on the ground of any error, mistake or omission, however important, made by or on the part of the person or persons effecting the same; and that, on the contrary, the amount receivable under the same shall be paid at the time stipulated by the Policy, to the person entitled thereto, as if no such error, mistake or omission had been made or discovered, unless the Policy shall have been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation."

FAMILY PROVISION POLICIES.—In the well-founded belief that Life Assurance business is profitable, persons making provisions for their families, and contemplating a long duration of time between the date of the Policy and the claim to arise under it, generally prefer Assurances which may carry with them a right to participate in the profits to be realized by the Company during the currency of their Policies. By the Deed of Constitution of this Company, the participating Assured are entitled to the WHOLE OF THE MUTUAL PROFITS, as if they had been Assured in a purely Mutual Society; and they have, at the same time, the security not only of the Funds of the Company, arising from the accumulated premiums, but also the proprietary funds and subscribed Capital of the Company. To the Shareholders are allotted only those profits which are realized by the investment of their own paid capital, and from the excess of the premiums derived from the Non-participating Assurances. This mode of Division of Profits is peculiar to this Company.

In order to provide against the defeat of a Policy in the hands of a CREDITOR, by the DEBTOR, whose Life is assured leaving the country, and going beyond the prescribed limits, the Company grant WHOLE WORLD POLICIES, whereby, on condition of receiving an extra premium, varying in amount according to the circumstances of the case, but fixed and determined at the time of issuing the Policy, the debtor, on whose Life an Assurance has been effected, is entitled to go to or reside in any part of the world, without invalidating the Assurance.

To enable a party to effect an Assurance at the LEAST POSSIBLE EXPENSE, and to entitle him to discontinue it at a less sacrifice than by any other plan, a seven years' Half-premium system has been introduced; and, upon comparing the following scale with any other which has been devised for reducing present payments, it will be seen how much more economically a loan transaction can be fortified by this kind of Policy than by any other. The Half-premium system possesses a further advantage over temporary Assurances, or those for a Term of Years, from the Assured having the option of continuing for Life the Policy which he may have procured for a mere temporary purpose.

THE COMMISSION allowed to Attorneys is 10l. per cent. upon the first, and 5l. per cent. upon all future premiums; and the Commission continues to be payable to the Attorney, who completed the Assurance with the Company, although the future premiums may be paid by others.

The usual weekly Board day is Thursday, but Policies may be obtained any day betwixt the hours of 10 and 5.

LONDON, AUGUST 13, 1842.

THE County Courts Bill was last week ordered by the House of Commons to be printed with some additional clauses; and although it has since been withdrawn (see our Parliamentary summary), yet, as it has only been so for the purpose of affording time for it to be considered during the recess, and as it is a measure which greatly affects the profession, we lose no time in calling attention to its provisions, in doing which it will be most convenient to follow the order of the clauses.

All pleas of personal actions, where the debt or damage claimed is not more than 20*l.*, except where the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, or any toll, fair, market, or franchise, is in question, or actions relating to wills or settlements, may be brought in the County Court without writ, wherever the cause of action may have arisen. Besides this, parties may, if they think fit, agree to try before the Judge of the Court actions of the above nature, or in which the sum sought to be recovered exceeds 20*l.* What use will be made of this power cannot be easily anticipated, but we think it probable that few will avail themselves of it. It is in fact a species of arbitration, and many of our readers must know how difficult it is to persuade litigant parties to agree to such a mode of deciding their disputes. It, however, removes one great difficulty, the choice of the arbitrator, and perhaps may therefore be favourably regarded. And even if it be not so, as it has nothing compulsory about it, it cannot do harm, and will at the most only fall into disuse.

With respect to the persons before whom the Courts are to be holden, the bill provides, that where the debt or damage claimed is not more than 5*l.*, the action is to be heard before one of the county clerks, who are to be appointed for each county by the Lord Chancellor, and to be barristers or attorneys who have practised as such for seven years. Actions for more than 5*l.* are to be heard before the Judges of the County Courts, twelve of whom are to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor, and they must be serjeants or barristers of seven years' standing, or have practised for three years as special pleaders, and as barristers for four. These judges are to make circuits, one being assigned to each circuit, and there being at least six circuits in the year. The 13th section of the Bill provides, that the Judges of the County Courts shall not practise as barristers within their circuits; but there is no clause to prevent barristers and attorneys being county clerks from practising. We do not understand why this distinction should be made. It is true they are only to adjudicate upon the minor cases; but the reason would seem to apply as much to the one Judge as to the other. Perhaps it is not intended to remunerate them sufficiently to justify the expectation that they would give up the exercise of their profession. Upon this we cannot at present form an opinion, as the salaries are left in blank. But to proceed to that part of the Bill which relates to the proceedings of these Courts.

The commencement is by entering with the clerk of the Court a plaint in writing, whereupon a summons is issued. The cause of action need not have arisen, nor need the plaintiff reside within the district; but the defendant must be dwelling or carrying on his business there, or have done so within the previous six calendar months. To prevent, however, the injustice which might ensue from compelling a person to sue another in the district of the latter, when the former and the witnesses resided at a distance, another clause provides that where the plaintiff dwells more than twenty miles from the defendant, or where the cause of action did not arise wholly or in some material point within the jurisdiction of the Court within which the defendant dwells, the Courts at Westminster shall have concurrent jurisdiction. All actions for less than 5*l*. are to be determined by the judge alone; where the demand exceeds that sum, either party may require a jury. But our readers must not suppose that, when the term jury is used, the well-known mode of trial peculiar to this country, and of which Englishmen have always been so proud, is meant. It suits not the temper of the present times to conform to the customs of our ancestors. We had occasion some time since, in our remarks upon Lord Cottenham's Bill, to notice that a jury of three persons was in fact no jury at all. The form of swearing three men to give a verdict might indeed be gone through; but the decision would, in the natural course of things, be that of one. And does the present measure meet this objection? It provides that there shall not be less than three nor more than five jurymen, as the judge shall direct, and is open to the same observation. Why has this innovation upon the constitution of a jury been made? It has been the fashion lately to decry this mode of trial, to dwell with malicious emphasis upon the ignorance of jurymen generally, and to ask triumphantly why matters which puzzle the most acute and well-informed minds, should be left to the decision of twelve men, taken by chance, and perhaps never having been in such a situation before? We are aware of all this; but whence, if this tribunal is so inefficient, has arisen the strong attachment that has ever been felt towards it? Experience shews that whatever individual instances there may be of juries giving improper verdicts, justice is, upon the whole, well administered. But how are such objections to a jury removed by diminishing the number of its members? Suppose, as must and does frequently occur, one or two of the jurymen are prejudiced in favour of either party. Amongst twelve men this would be of little importance; the honesty and sense of the rest would prevail. But reduce the number to five, and let three of them decide the matter, and this security is gone. Dishonesty is ever bold and unscrupulous, and the two bad men would have little difficulty in overcoming the scruples of the weakest minded of the other three, and so gain their end. Why use the term jury at all? Will it not content these innovators to throw aside, as it were, with contempt, the time-honoured institution? Must they also steal its name? Perhaps the reason is, that by having a smaller number of jurymen the trial will be made less expensive; and, as the cheapness of the justice, without much regard to any other quality, seems the object, it matters little whether the jury, thus constituted, is a good one or not. This, however, is no reason for allowing a majority to decide. Although it may at first appear unreasonable to require an unanimous opinion, it is more likely to secure a right decision. Instances are not unfrequent of one jurymen being at first opposed to all the others, and afterwards persuading them to coincide with him; and when this happens we may, in most instances, presume that he is right; for it is unlikely that eleven men would be persuaded to violate their consciences; but when the number is smaller, and a majority only is to be gained over, the probability of the one man being right is very much lessened.

To proceed however to the other parts of the bill.

The plaint is the only written pleading, the evidence to be confined to the demand or cause of action state in the summons, and the defendant is not allowed to set off any debt or demand due from the plaintiff, or to set up a defence of the Statute of Limitations, or a discharge under the Bankrupt or Insolvent Acts, without leaving, five days before the hearing, a notice in writing with the clerk of the court, who is to communicate it to the plaintiff. The bill does not say what shall be the form of this notice; but, as the judges of the courts are to have power to frame forms for such proceedings as they shall think necessary, we presume the defendant will have to set out in his notice such particulars of the intended defence as will enable the plaintiff to prepare himself to meet it. Thus, we see, it is impossible altogether to dispense with written pleadings; and the law which requires them is dictated by a wise and just policy.

We pass over some clauses, which relate to the proceedings where either the plaintiff or defendant does not appear, the summoning of witnesses, and the removal of plaints into the Superior Courts, and proceed to that intitled in the margin, "What may be charged by agents." By this clause, the present Bill, like its predecessors, seeks to secure the cheapness of justice, by depriving the parties of professional assistance. No barrister, attorney, or other person is to be entitled to appear as an advocate, except by leave of the Court. And even this prohibition is not considered sufficient; but, more effectually to prevent the employment of attorneys, the allowance for remuneration is made so small as to render it improbable that any but the worst of the class will find it worth their while to practise in these Courts. What the consequence will be it is not difficult to foresee. The attorney will take care to remunerate himself; and plaintiffs will have to sacrifice part of the money recovered to pay costs which cannot be obtained from defendants. Cheap justice will thus be given to the debtor at the expense of his creditor.

We may also usefully notice that actions of replevin, where the sum for which the distress is taken does not exceed 20*l*., may be brought in the County Court; and the 97th clause gives to the Judge of the County Court, upon the plaint of the landlord, the same power to deliver possession of tenements let for a less rent than 20*l*. a year, as is given to justices by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74; with this difference, however, that the words in the latter act, which confine its operation to tenancies at will, or for terms not exceeding seven years, are omitted in the present Bill.

Such are the principal provisions of this measure. Twelve years have elapsed since Lord Brougham first brought forward his Local Courts Bill. During that period various attempts have been made to establish some such system, but without success; and it was reserved for the present Government, some of whose members have, if we mistake not, formerly opposed those attempts, to introduce a Bill with a probability of its becoming part of the law. We had anticipated its doing so; but although it has somewhat unexpectedly not passed this Session, yet, as it appears intended to be, and doubtless will be, again brought forward, our present observations will not be altogether without use.

POINTS ON THE INCOME-TAX ACT.

It was not likely that an Act, intended to affect every interest in the country, whether depending on property of a fixed character, or on the fluctuating returns of trades and professions, should come from the hands of Parliament with a clause clearly applicable to every imaginable case; and, accordingly, innumerable are already the doubts and queries arising on this important Act. We shall probably from time to time notice a few, as they become subjects of professional or general discussion; and we will now begin with one which nearly interests the younger practisers in all professions, but more particularly the younger members of our profession in both of its branches. We allude to the mode of charging the duty as against that not inconsiderable body of professional aspirants for success, whose labours, though they may produce much intellectual, produce but small pecuniary profit, placing the labourer in the class of those whose professional profits fall short of their professional expenditure. The question is, in such cases, what portions of his professional expenditure a person so situated, having of course some income arising from sources distinct from his profession, is entitled to set off against his receipts, and whether he is in any case entitled to set off such his expenditure against his general income.

The portions of the Act which affect the consideration of this question in certain cases, are some of the subordinate sections of clause 100, relating to schedule D.* The second case put by the Act (p. 116) under this head relates to the "duty to be charged in respect of the professions, employments, or vocations, not contained in any other schedule of this act." And the duty to be charged on the income arising from such professions is to be computed "at a sum not less than the full amount of the balance of the profits, gains, and emoluments of such professions, employments, or vocations, (after making such deductions and no other as by this Act are allowed), within the preceding year, ending as in the first case, to be paid on the actual amount of such profits or gains, without any deduction," subject to certain provisions as to average, which do not affect the point under consideration. The guide as to estimating what constitutes the balance of profits is to be found in the first rule (under sect. 100) applying to the two classes of cases contemplated by that section, viz. trades and professional employments. (See p. 117). That rule is in the following words:—"In estimating the balance of the profits or gains to be charged according to either of the first or second classes, no sum shall be set against or deducted from, or allowed to be set against or deducted from, such profits or gains, for any disbursements or expenses whatever, not being money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of such trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern, or of such profession, employment, or vocation; nor for any disbursements or expenses of maintenance of the parties, their families, or establishments; nor for the rent or value of any dwelling-house or domestic offices, or any part of such dwelling-house or domestic offices, except such part thereof as may be used for the purposes of such trade or concern, not exceeding the proportion of the said rent or value hereinafter mentioned; nor for any sum expended in any other domestic or private purposes distinct from the purposes of such trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern, or of such profession, employment, or vocation." The proportion of the rent of any dwelling-house, partly used for dwelling and partly for the purposes of a profession, which is alluded to in the rule just cited, is stated in sect. 101, (p. 123), which enacts, "that nothing herein contained shall be construed to restrain any person carrying on, either solely or in partnership, two or more distinct trades, manufactures, or concerns in the nature of trade, the profits whereof are chargeable under the rules of schedule D., from deducting or setting against the profits acquired in one or more of the said concerns the excess of the loss sustained in any other of the said concerns over and above the profits thereof, in such manner as may be done under this Act where a loss shall be deducted from the profits of the same concern, or to restrain any of such persons from making separate statements thereof, or to restrain any such person renting a dwelling-house, part whereof shall be used by him for the purposes of any trade or concern, or any profession hereby charged, from deducting or setting off from the profits of such trade, concern, or profession, such sum not exceeding two-third parts of the rent bonâ fide paid for such dwelling-house, with the appurtenances, as the said respective commissioners shall, on due consideration, allow."

Now, to apply these somewhat obscure and disjointed provisions. Suppose, first, the case of a person carrying on a profession, and for that purpose renting offices for the sole purpose of business, and incurring other professional expenditure; in estimating the profits of his profession, he is entitled, we apprehend, under the negative clause in the first rule, p. 115, to deduct from his receipts the rent of his offices, and all expenditure strictly incurred in reference to the exercise of his profession, that is, "money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of such profession, employment, or vocation." But the rule is in terms only applicable to the ascertainment of the profits of his profession. Nothing else is contemplated in Schedule D. and in the second case stated in the Act (p. 116). The duties chargeable on income arising from other sources, are provided for by totally distinct sections of the Act, in some cases subject to a right of making deductions, in others specifically without such right. It appears, consequently, abundantly clear, that in the case put, the party chargeable may not set off the professional expenditure incurred as against his gross income, but only as against his income derived from his profession, for the purpose of ascertaining whether he has or not made any and what profits by it.

Let us now take the next case, of a person carrying on a profession in offices or rooms, part of another person's house, held under a gross rent—which offices he uses for the purpose of his dwelling as well as for the purposes of business. Is such person entitled to deduct from his professional receipts, in computing profits, any and what portion of the rent of such offices? It is clear, that the rent, being a gross rent, is not money

* We shall refer throughout to the small 8vo. edition of the act, printed by the Queen's printer.

"wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of such profession, &c.;" he cannot, therefore, deduct it under the first part of the rule, p. 117. Do, then, his offices, or that portion of them, if any, used for business only, fall within the second part of the rule which prohibits any deduction for the "rent or value of any dwelling-house or domestic offices, or any part of such dwelling-house or domestic offices, except such part thereof as may be used for the purpose of such trade or concern." These words appear to point to the case of a person being tenant of a house of which he uses part as his dwelling-house, and part for offices of business; and the 101st section, which in terms is confined to the case of a person renting a dwelling-house, part of which shall be used by him for the purpose of any trade &c., seem to favour that construction of the rule, p. 117. The case, therefore, of chambers or offices used by A., B., and C., both as offices and dwellings, in a house in the tenancy of D., seems to be a casus omissus in the Act, and it is somewhat doubtful whether upon the strict wording of the Act, a professional man so occupying offices will be entitled to set off against his receipts any portion of the rent. At any rate, it seems clear that he cannot set off more than two-thirds of it, the rent not being exclusively paid for the purposes of his profession. And it is equally clear that he cannot set off such proportion against his gross income, but only against the receipts of his profession.

We have received a small pamphlet, intitled "Witnesses out of Court," and addressed "to those in authority connected with the Erection of the New Law Courts in the City of London." Its object, as the title imports, is to enforce the necessity of excluding witnesses from the court during a trial in which they are concerned. It is justly observed by the author, "that the success and ruin of thousands and tens of thousands who venture upon the troubled waters of the law, frequently depends upon the course taken at a trial with regard to the witnesses. Instead of being the exception, as it is now, the having the witnesses out of court ought to be the rule. There is at present a reluctance on the part both of the counsel and attorney to ask for it; and, beyond doubt, instances not unfrequently occur where, if such a precaution had been adopted, the perjury of the witnesses would have been detected." What the author proposes is, that there should be a witness-room, opening direct by a clear passage into the witness-box, and that the witnesses in a cause should be ordered into that room upon the cause being called on, or they would not be allowed to give evidence. The matter is well worthy of consideration. There seems no reason whatever for allowing a witness to hear the counsel of the party, on whose behalf he is to give evidence, state to the jury what he expects the witness to prove, or to hear the statements of the other witnesses by which he may be guided in giving his own account. Counsel are not allowed to put questions to their witnesses so as to suggest the answer, and yet, under the present system, there is nothing to prevent them from suggesting in their opening speech what they wish the witnesses to say. We hope the authorities, to whom this pamphlet is addressed, will adopt the proposed plan; for, if they do so, their example will no doubt be quickly followed.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

The following Order in Council dated the 11th August, 1842, appeared in last night's Gazette.—

Whereas there was this day read at the Board a representation from the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, dated the 10th August instant, and in the words following, viz. "The Lords of the Judicial Committee having taken into consideration the scale on which the costs of appeals, and other matters referred by your Majesty to this committee, are usually taxed by the Masters of the Court of Queen's Bench, or other persons to whom their Lordships have from time to time referred the same; their Lordships agree humbly to represent to your Majesty, that it is expedient that the scale of costs hitherto allowed in the said proceedings before this Committee, should be reduced; and their Lordships recommend that, provisionally, and until further consideration, such costs in all appeals, or matters not being appeals, from the Courts of Ecclesiastical or Admiralty jurisdiction, should be taxed and allowed by all such taxing officers as shall hereafter be directed to ascertain and report the same to the Board, according to the schedule hereunto annexed; and that this rate of charges should be observed by solicitors conducting business before this Committee."

Her Majesty having taken this representation into consideration, was pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to approve thereof, and of what is therein recommended, and to order, as it is hereby ordered, that the same be duly and punctually observed, complied with, and carried into execution. Whereof all persons whom it may concern are to take notice, and govern themselves accordingly.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Wednesday, Aug. 10.

The following Bills received the royal assent:—The Municipal Corporations Bill; the Double Costs Bill; the Copyright of Designs Bill; the Court of Chancery Offices Abolition Bill.

The Ecclesiastical Corporation Leases Bill was read a third time and passed.

The amendments of the Commons to the Bankruptcy Law Amendment Bill were agreed to.

The amendments of the Commons to the Insolvent Debtors Bill were agreed to, and the Bill read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, Aug. 9.

Sir J. Graham announced, that the Government did not intend to proceed with the County Courts Bill. He proposed, however, that certain amendments should be made, and that it should be printed with the amendments to be circulated during the recess.

Wednesday, Aug. 10.

The Bankruptcy Law Amendment Bill was read a third time, with an amendment to the effect, that fourteen days before a final dividend shall be advertised under any bankrupt's estate, there shall be sent by the official assignee to each creditor's assignee of such estate a debtor and creditor account between the official assignee and such estate, shewing also the monies remaining uncollected under such estate, and the cause of such monies remaining uncollected, a copy of which account shall be delivered to any creditor who shall apply for the same, and have proved or claimed a debt under such fiat, upon his applying for the same to the official assignee, and to every other person, such person not being a creditor, on payment of a sum not exceeding 2s. 6d., as shall be settled by the court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat.

The Insolvent Debtors Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Bankruptcy Law Amendment Bill was brought up from the Lords without any amendment.

The Ecclesiastical Courts Bill was postponed till the next Session of Parliament.

Sir James Graham brought in a Bill "to amend the Registration of Parliamentary Electors in England and Wales." His object was to have the Bill printed and circulated during the recess, that the subject might be resumed next session. He proposed in the first place, to repeal all the clauses of the Reform Act affecting registration, and then to re-enact them with alterations. He proposed that the payment of 1s., which had been much objected to by freeholders in the counties, should be abolished. With regard to the revising courts, he proposed that instead of the great number of revising barristers now appointed, there should be but one for each county on every circuit, who should receive 200 guineas a year for his remuneration. This would effect a saving of 10,000l. a year. He proposed that the Chief Judges of the three superior courts of Common Law should appoint three barristers, of a certain standing, who should constitute a permanent court of appeal. He proposed to introduce declaratory clauses as to the effect of the Reform Act, on certain disputed points, as for instance, that mortgagees should vote if in possession; that no trustee should vote unless he had also a beneficial interest; that the seven miles' distance should be measured in a straight line according to the Ordnance maps; and that the question put at the poll to voters as to continued residence, should be abolished in the counties, and modified in the boroughs.

The Bill was brought in and read a first time, and ordered to be printed, and read a second time that day three months.

LONDON, AUGUST 20, 1842.

ANOTHER session of Parliament has passed by, and whatever may have been the value of its labours in a political point of view, a question with which, as conductors of this Journal, we have no concern, it will be admitted, we think, by all concerned and interested in the administration of justice, that it has been marked by a very fair share of attention to the improvement of the Laws. Of those that have passed through the Legislature, the two most important are undoubtedly the Bankruptcy Act, and the Act for amending the Practice in Lunacy. Of the latter we have already expressed an opinion more than once, and will only now add, that it appears calculated so to simplify and expedite the administration of the protection of Chancery, as to offer its benefits to a class of persons hitherto most generally compelled to dispense with any, beyond the frequently unwilling, and sometimes not very safe protection of relatives or friends. From the establishment of permanent Commissioners, remunerated by fixed salaries paid by the State—standing before the public as acknowledged judicial functionaries, and having both the station and responsibilities annexed to such a position, none we apprehend can anticipate, so far as regards the duty of taking inquisitions in lunacy, anything but an improved and more satisfactory administration of the law. Nor do we anticipate the slightest difficulty in the transaction before them of the business arising out of such references as are now usually sent to a Master in Chancery. What is there indeed in the constitution of such a Court as that of the Lunacy Commissioners, to make them unfit for hearing evidence, and reporting to the Lord Chancellor on such matters as the propriety of granting leases, of repairing houses, of appointing particular persons to be committees, and other business of that class? Assisted, as their inquiries will doubtless be, by the reception of vivâ voce evidence, we anticipate, that, so far from there being anything either unsafe or otherwise prejudicial to the interests of lunatics in the contemplated transfer of the business of inquiries, from the Master's Office to the Commissioners' Courts, such inquiries will be conducted with much greater dispatch, and with perhaps a more searching and complete discovery of truth.

With regard to the Bankruptcy Act, on the provisions of which we shall probably in a future number of the Jurist comment more in detail, we shall only now observe generally, that the alteration which it effects in the administration of the law in working out country fiats, promises to be extensively beneficial. It proceeds, like the Lunacy Act, on the broad principle of introducing fixedness and greater responsibility in the judicial body; a principle which scarcely ought to require the proof afforded by experiment to demonstrate its value, but which, so far as the administration in bankruptcy is concerned, is fully justified by the results of a long-continued practice. Of the details of this Act, so far as they are new, it may be difficult to pronounce yet any confident opinion, but its general character of improvement is clear.

The question of Local Courts has also received consideration, and though the mode in which the bill for establishing them has been dealt with cannot be classed among the legislative improvements of the Session, yet we think most of our readers will agree that it must be considered as one of the beneficial omissions of the Legislature. To suppose that the bill had been brought in with the intention of laying it on the shelf after a decent appearance of pushing it on, would be indeed inconsistent with the respect due to the sincerity of the Legislature generally, and the promoters of the Bill individually. Yet, on the other hand, to suppose that such a Bill was supported and intended to be urged forward in earnest, by the wise and learned persons who apparently were its promoters, would be still more inconsistent with one's faith in their acknowledged ability and wisdom. The suspended bill had all the vices of all its predecessors in the same line; the same unseemly and impolitic mixture of different professional ranks in the county clerks who were to be the judges of the subordinate local courts; the same defect of those inferior Judges being alone permitted to be Judges and practising lawyers; the same affectation of committing the trial of facts to a jury, with the same absence of any thing having the reality of a jury, or any of its integral qualities, except that of the members of it being sworn; the same indirect exclusion of professional agents of any learning, and the same tendency to throw the management of suits into the hands of ignorant and unprincipled men. The bill is to be before the public during the recess of Parliament, and we trust, that, in that interval, some pen of more power than ours will be devoted to the task of dispelling, if possible, that vague affection which the public appear to entertain for the idea of Courts without pleadings and without lawyers, regardless of any consideration whether in the present complex state of property, even among the lowest classes who possess any, it is possible to obtain a due administration of justice, without the intervention of settled forms, and of men not only of legal learning but of generally educated minds.

It is to be regretted, that, among the completed labours of Parliament, nothing should be found touching the improvement of the Registration Courts; but to that subject the Legislature has not been wholly inattentive. The bill brought in by Sir James Graham, which at a future opportunity we propose to discuss with some detail, appears, so far as its principal provisions were stated to the House, to contain features of great improvement on the present system; of that the errors have now become, by the experience of many years, fully demonstrated.

The substitution for the present countless Revision Judges of a small number of Revising Barristers, each embracing in his jurisdiction a large circle, and of course being required to devote to it a larger share of time and attention, will be of itself no slight improvement. The value of a Court of Appeal will depend on its special construction. If it be exclusively devoted to the consideration of questions arising upon claims to vote, its permanent utility has always appeared, and still appears to us most questionable; but undoubtedly some appeal from the Revision Courts is requisite.

We have not here noticed several other Acts affecting the state of the law, such as the Factors' Act, the Copyright Act, and others, which, although perhaps of less importance, are yet considerable additions to the improvement of the law; and, on the whole, we think we shall not err in saying, that those whose interests are affected by the state of the laws, and the structure of judicial institutions, have no reason to be dissatisfied with the portion of attention which Parliament has devoted during the past session to those objects.

Remarks on the Laws relating to Attempts against the Person of the Sovereign. By GEORGE K. RICKARDS Esq., M. A., Barrister.

[London: Sweet, and Ridgway.]

We gather from the introductory portion of the remarks, that they had been written, together with much more, in consequence of the late attempts against the sovereign, and before the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 61, had held up the prospect of flagellation as the reward of those whose thirst for distinction shall in future lead them to seek it by discharging at their sovereign rusty button out of still rustier pocket pistols. The author of the measure has, according to the statement of Mr. Rickards, "at once rendered superfluous and inapplicable a great part of that which he had written, and which had been intended to evince the necessity of some alteration in the previously existing law, and to advocate the adoption of some provisions very nearly similar to those introduced by the Government." Having however come to the conclusion, our author continues "After much consideration of the subject, that there are yet points in which the law requires amendment, and which the late measure has left untouched, and that something is still wanting to invest the sovereign with that full protection against attempts of a treasonable nature, which is so essential both to her own personal safety, and to the public welfare, he conceives, that it may even now be not useless to point out that infirmity which appears to him, notwithstanding what has been effected, to adhere to the laws applicable to the offences in question."

The object of the pamphlet before us appears to be principally to urge, that we are not to fall into the error of permitting ourselves to be drawn, by the improvement effected in the law against wanton and apparently motiveless attempts to terrify, if not to injure the sovereign, into inattention to the defects of the law against actual bonâ fide treason; or into the supposition, that the whole law regarding attempts against the person of the sovereign has received its utmost finish. "The prevailing tendency of the public mind, (he says, p. 14), which the warm feeling of loyal affection that animates it, has doubtless also contributed to produce, being thus, as the writer conceives, to discredit the existence of really treasonable attempts against the Crown, to extenuate such as have occurred, and to see no danger to Royalty beyond that of annoyance from the brutal pranks of despicable vagabonds, whom the terrors of a sound flogging may keep in check, it will doubtless be disposed to receive with perfect satisfaction, and without demanding any ulterior change, a statute so well calculated for the repression of this class of offenders, as that which has just passed."

Mr. Rickards thinks, that, however much the act lately passed may have improved the law regarding those mock attempts against the life of the Sovereign, which in fact are more in terrorism persons than in personam, the law of treason generally, and particularly that rule of evidence which, in a case where fire-arms have been discharged at the royal person, throws on the prosecutor the onus of proving that the fire-arms were loaded with deadly materials, are not sufficiently stringent to protect the royal person against substantive treasonable attempts. And, accordingly, he proposes an alteration of the rules of evidence as a simple and efficacious remedy.

"The alteration" (he says, p. 26) "in the law of treason which the writer would suggest, as immediately and in the first place required, in order to render its administration free, vigorous, and effective, is no sweeping extension of its penalties, nor any revival of

"those exploded doctrines and obsolete constructions, which formerly placed the lives and liberties of the subject at the mercy of the crown. It is simple, easy, and definite; neither repugnant to the analogy of the English law, nor at variance with the essential principles of equity and reason; and it is justified, if there be any force in the preceding remarks, by reasons of the highest public necessity. It is nothing more than a modification of the rules of evidence, a shifting of the burden of proof from that party who can rarely possess the means of affording it, to that party with whom a knowledge of the truth must always reside, and who, by the commission of an act unquestionably illegal in the first instance, has already, in the eye of reason, placed himself under the cloud of an adverse presumption."

The author then proposes, that, as in the case of homicide, the law presumes malice, where the act is proved, and throws it on the homicide to negative that presumption by evidence; so in the case of a personal attempt against the sovereign, of the nature, for instance, of a discharge of fire-arms, the law shall presume the fact of loading with deadly materials, and throw on the prisoner the proof of matter to rebut such presumption. The arguments of the learned author in support of his view are put with considerable force, and his observations generally on the state of the law of treason are not undeserving of attention, notwithstanding the recent improvement of the particular branch to which the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51 applies.

We are not, however, ourselves disposed wholly to coincide in the propriety of the learned writer's proposition. It goes to a considerable extent to throw on the prisoner the proof of a negative. If, for instance, the attempt of the prisoner is by firing off a pistol, the question whether loaded or not is a question of fact; and of a fact which requires an almost imperceptible time for its transaction. There might be a hundred witnesses to prove that a pistol was not loaded up to a certain period; but unless that period was the period instantly preceding its discharge, the evidence would be valueless to prove the nonloading. In regard to homicide, the point is very different. There, the act of homicide is held to afford a presumption of malice; now malice is not a mere instantaneous act, but a continuation of mental impulses, almost of necessity the result of many circumstances. Hence evidence of a variety of antecedent and collateral facts, may afford inferences rebutting the presumption of such a continued state of mind in the prisoner. We cannot but think also that our author has allowed his imagination to be a little too much affected with alarm at the dangerous consequences of the present state of the law, and that the general tone of his observations tends somewhat too much to the formation of an over-stringent law. The subject is however important, and Mr. Rickards has undertaken a beneficial task in endeavouring to call attention to it.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—The Lord Chancellor has issued the following Order, which was posted in the hall of the Court in Basinghall-street, on Wednesday last:—

"In Bankruptcy.—I do hereby order, that the books of the Accountant in Bankruptcy be closed from the 20th of August, inst., to the 4th day of October next, and that during that time no draught for any effects shall be signed and delivered out, nor any purchase, sale, or transfer of any stocks, securities, or effects to be made by the said Accountant in Bankruptcy, for or on account of any bankrupt's estate; provided that the said Accountant be at liberty to sign orders or cheques for dividends in such cases as may appear urgent.

"LYNDBURST, Chancellor."

CAP. LIV.

An Act to amend the Acts for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales, and to continue the Officers appointed under the said Acts for a Time to be limited.

[30th July, 1842.]

Whereas by an act passed in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, [c. 71], intitled "An Act for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales," it was among other things enacted, that no commissioner or assistant commissioner, secretary, assistant secretary, or other officer or person appointed under the said act, should hold his office for a longer period than five years next after the day of the passing of the said act, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of parliament; and that after the expiration of the said period of five years and of the then next session of parliament so much of the said act as authorizes any such appointment should cease; And whereas by an act passed in the last session of parliament (5 Vict. c. 7) it was among other things provided, that so much of the last-recited act as is hereinbefore recited should be repealed, and that no commissioner or assistant commissioner, secretary, assistant secretary, or other officer or person so to be appointed, should hold his office for a longer period than until the 31st day of July, 1842; and that after the said 31st day of July so much of the last-recited act as authorizes any such appointment should cease: And whereas it is expedient that the said commission be further continued; be it enacted, That so much of the last-recited act as is hereinbefore recited shall be repealed, except so far as it repeals any part of the first-recited act; and that no commissioner or assistant commissioner, secretary, assistant secretary, or other officer or person so appointed or to be appointed, shall hold his office for a longer period than the 31st day of July, 1847, and to the end of the then next session of parliament.

2. And whereas by the first-recited act power is given to the land owners and tithe owners of any parish to make and execute an agreement for the commutation of the tithes of that parish as therein specified; and power is also given to the said commissioners, after the 1st day of October, 1838, to make compulsory awards for the commutation of tithes in any parish in which no such agreement shall have been made as aforesaid, and confirmed by the said commissioners: And whereas doubts have been entertained whether, pending the proceedings towards a compulsory award, the land owners and tithe owners can make and execute a voluntary agreement which, if confirmed by the said commissioners, shall be valid, and it is expedient that such doubts be removed; be it declared and enacted, That a parochial agreement for the payment of a rent-charge instead of tithes, as provided by the said act, may be made in the manner therein specified, at any time before the confirmation of any award for the commutation of the tithes of the same parish; and such agreement may contain provisions for declaring how the expenses of the parties, or any of them, shall be defrayed, which shall have been incurred in contesting the award; and every such agreement, whether made before or after the passing of this act, if confirmed by the commissioners, shall be as valid as if made and executed before any proceedings had been taken toward making a compulsory award, and shall have the effect of making null and void all the proceedings toward such compulsory award, or incident thereunto, except so far as the same shall be adopted in such agreement.

3. That in all cases where no time is fixed by any award or agreement commuting the tithes of a parish for the commencement of the rent-charge or rent-charges therein awarded or agreed upon, it shall be lawful, notwithstanding that the apportionment of the said rent-charge or rent-charges may have been confirmed, for the land owners and tithe owners, having such an interest in the land and tithes of the parish as is required for making a parochial agreement, to enter into a supplemental agreement for fixing the period at which the rent-charge or rent-charges to be paid under such award or agreement shall commence: Provided always, that such supplemental agreement shall be of no force or effect unless the same shall be confirmed by the said commissioners under their hands and seal; and a copy of every such supplemental agreement shall be deposited with the registrar of the diocese, and in the pariah, in like manner as instruments of apportionment are deposited under the said first-recited act.

4. And whereas by the first-recited act power is given to the said commissioners to make awards in cases reserved for special adjudication, having regard to the average rate which shall be awarded in respect of lands of the like description and similarly situated in the neighbouring parishes: And whereas it sometimes happens that voluntary agreements for the commutation of tithes have been made in the greater part of such neighbouring parishes; be it enacted, That, in awarding the rent-charge in any case so reserved, the commissioners shall be empowered to have regard to the average rate of commutation in respect of lands of the like description and similarly situated, not only in the neighbouring parishes in which there has been an award by the commissioners, but also in those in which there has been a parochial agreement for the commutation of tithes.

5. And whereas it will be beneficial to both tithe owners and land owners if the tithe commissioners are empowered to define the glebe lands in those cases in which the quantity of glebe is known, but cannot be identified, and also to exchange the glebe lands or part thereof for other land; be it enacted, That for the purpose of defining and settling the glebe lands of any benefice, on the application of the spiritual person to whom the same belongs in right of such benefice, and with the consent of the land owner or land owners having or claiming title to the land so defined as glebe, and being in possession thereof, the tithe commissioners shall, during the continuance of the commission, as well before as after the completion of any commutation, have the same powers which they have for ascertaining, drawing, and defining the boundaries of the lands of any land owners on their application; and also upon the like application of any spiritual person, the said commissioners shall have power to exchange the glebe lands, or any part thereof, for other land within the same or any adjoining parish, or otherwise conveniently situated, with the consent of the ordinary and patron of the benefice and of the land owner or land owners having or claiming title to the land so to be given in exchange for the glebe lands, and being in actual possession thereof as aforesaid, such consent to be testified as their consent under the first-recited act is testified to anything for which their consent is therein required; and in every such case the tithe commissioners shall make an award in like manner as awards are made under the first-recited act, setting forth the contents, description, and boundary of the glebe lands as finally settled by them, and of the lands awarded to the several parties to whom any lands theretofore part or reputed part of the glebe lands are to be awarded; and every such award shall have all the incidents of an agreement confirmed by the said commissioners for giving land instead of tithes, and in every case of exchange shall operate as a conveyance of the lands theretofore part or reputed part of the glebe lands to the several persons to whom the same shall be awarded, and to their heirs and successors, executors and administrators, as the case may be; and such lands shall thereupon be holden by the same tenure, and upon the like uses and trusts, and subject to the like incidents, as the land awarded as glebe in exchange for the same was formerly holden; and the expense of so defining, exchanging, and settling any glebe lands shall be borne in such manner as the tithe commissioners shall think just.

6. And whereas the power of giving land instead of tithes has been found beneficial to both tithe owners and land owners, but such power has been inoperative in a great degree by reason that the land owners by giving land instead of vicarial tithe cannot free their lands from the liability to rectorial tithe, and the converse; be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for any tithe owner, with the consent of the patron and ordinary in the case of spiritual tithes, to be testified as their consent under the first-recited act is testified to anything for which their consent is therein required, and subject in that case to the limitation of quantity of land provided by the first-recited act, and subject to the approval of the tithe commissioners, to agree for the assignment to any other owner of tithes issuing out of the same lands of so much of his tithes arising within the same parish or of the rent-charge agreed or awarded to be paid instead of such tithes as shall be an equivalent for the tithes belonging to such other tithe owner issuing out of the same lands, or for the rent-charge agreed or awarded to be paid instead thereof, for the purpose of enabling any land owner who shall be desirous of giving land instead of tithes to free his lands, or any part thereof, from both rectorial and vicarial tithes, and from the payment of any rent-charge in respect thereof; and every such agreement shall be carried into effect by means of an award or supplemental award, to be made by the said commissioners either before or after the confirmation of the apportionment, in like manner as awards or supplemental awards are made by them pursuant to the powers vested in them before the passing of this act.

7. That where any agreement shall have been made before the passing of the first-recited act for giving land or money, or both, instead of tithes or glebe or commonable or other rights or easements, which is not of legal validity, and such lands or money, or both, shall appear to the commissioners to be a fair equivalent for the said tithes or glebe, or rights or easements, they shall be empowered to confirm and render valid such agreement; and in case the same shall not appear to be a fair equivalent, the said commissioners shall nevertheless be empowered to confirm such agreement, and also to make an award for such rent-charge, which with the said land or money, or both, will be a fair equivalent for the said tithes or glebe, or rights or easements, and subject to such confirmation and award, to extinguish the right of the tithe owners to the perception of the said tithes, or his title to the said glebe rights or easements, or to the receipt of any rent-charge instead thereof, other than the rent-charge awarded over and above the lands or money, or both, so confirmed to them.

8. That in every case in which any spiritual person shall have died or vacated his benefice before exercising the powers vested in him of borrowing money for the purpose of defraying so much of the expenses of commutation as is to be defrayed by him, and of charging the rent-charge with the repayment of the money borrowed, it shall be lawful for the tithe commissioners, with the consent of the ordinary, to borrow money for that purpose, and to charge the repayment thereof upon the rent-charge, or so much thereof as they, with the like consent, shall think just, with interest thereupon, and for that purpose to assign the rent-charge in like manner as such spiritual person, if living or in possession of his benefice, could himself have done; and the person in whose favour such charge shall have been made, and his assigns, shall have the like remedies for enforcing payment of the principal and interest of the money so borrowed, in case of any arrear in payment of the said charge, as if such charge had been made by the person so dying or vacating his benefice.

9. That in all cases, whether the tithes of any parish have been commuted or not, where any question as to the liability of any lands to the render of tithes, or as to the existence of any modus or composition real, or prescriptive or customary payment, or any claim of exemption from or non-liability to the payment of tithes in respect of any lands, shall have been heard and determined by the said commissioners, or by any assistant-commissioner under their direction, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners or any assistant commissioner, after the time for appeal to a court of law from the said determination has elapsed, or in case there has been such appeal, after the judgment of the court on such appeal, to make an award, founded on the decision of the said commissioners or assistant commissioner, or the judgment of any court of law to which appeal shall have been made from the decision of the said commissioners or assistant commissioner, for the determination of all questions of arrears of tithes claimed in any suit which may be pending in any court of equity for the purpose of trying, as to the same lands, such liability, or the legality of such claim, modus, composition, or customary payment, and of the liability of any of the parties to payment of the costs of the proceedings in such suit, for which purpose they respectively shall have all the powers which under the said recited acts or any of them they have for ascertaining the value of the tithes of such lands; and such award shall have the effect of the verdict of a jury, on an issue directed by the Court of Chancery satisfactory to the judge or court directing the same, and shall be received by the Court of Chancery as conclusive evidence of the liability or non-liability of such lands, and of the amount of such arrears, and of the liability of the several parties to the payment of costs in such suit; and any order of the Court of Chancery made thereon shall be binding on all parties, and no appeal to any other judge or court shall be brought against such order.

10. That where any question is or shall be brought for the decision of the tithe commissioners or any assistant commissioner, relative to any of the matters mentioned in an act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, [c. 100.] intitled "An Act for shortening the Time required in Claims of Modus Decimandi, or Exemption from or Discharge of Tithes," as to which any such suit shall have been commenced and shall be pending as would have prevented the operation of the said recited act, such recited act shall not have any operation as to any award or decision respecting such question to be made by the said tithe commissioners or any assistant commissioner.

11. That in any parish where any rent-charge has been agreed or awarded to be paid instead of tithes, and security has been given for payment of such rent-charge, and the lands in such parish have been discharged from payment or render of tithes or composition, or rent in the nature thereof, instead of tithes, before the apportionment of such rent-charge, it shall be lawful for the tithe commissioners, by a declaration in writing under the hands of any two of them, and their seal of office, to fix the same half-yearly days of payment of the whole rent-charge, after apportionment thereof; and in consideration that the payment of some sums will be thereby accelerated, and the payment of other sums will be thereby deferred and retarded, to make such alterations and allowances in the payments to be made in the first year after the apportionment, both by way of interest for every sum of which payment will be thereby deferred, and by way of discount to be allowed for every sum of which payment will be thereby accelerated, as to the commissioners shall seem just.

12. That it shall be lawful for any owner of rent-charge, having taken possession of any land for nonpayment of the rent-charge under the provisions of the first-recited act, from time to time during the continuance of such possession to let such land, or any part thereof, for any period not exceeding one year in possession, at such rent as can be reasonably obtained for the same; and the restitution of such land, on payment or satisfaction of the rent-charge, costs, and expenses, shall be subject and without prejudice to any such tenancy.

13. That it shall be lawful for any board of guardians of any parish or union, with the consent of the poor-law commissioners, and subject to such conditions as the said poor-law commissioners may prescribe, to pay out of the rates of any parish any portion of the cost of making or providing any map or plan which shall have been confirmed under the hands and seal of the tithe commissioners, or any other sum of money by way of consideration for the use of the said map or plan, for the purpose of estimating the net annual value of property in respect of which rates may be assessed for the relief of the poor; and after the tithe commissioners shall have certified in writing that such money has been paid, the overseers of the parish, or any person authorized by them in writing, or any officer of the said board of guardians, or any person authorized by them in writing, shall at all reasonable times have access to the copy of the said map or plan deposited with the incumbent and church or chapel wardens of the parish, or other persons approved by the said tithe commissioners, and may inspect and make copies or extracts from the said copy, without paying anything for such access or inspection, or for making such copies or extracts.

14. And whereas by the first-recited act power is given for altering apportionments of rent-charge by the commissioners of land-tax, on the application of the owner of the lands charged therewith, and it is expedient that the power thereby given should be extended, and also that during the continuance of the tithe commission the like power should be vested in the tithe commissioners; be it enacted, That if at any time after the confirmation of any instrument of apportionment it shall appear that the lands charged with one entire rent-charge belong to or have become vested in several owners, and that any of the owners of such lands shall be desirous that the apportionment thereof should be altered, it shall be lawful for the commissioners of land-tax for the county or place where the said lands are situated, or any three of them, to appoint, by notice under their hands, a time and place for hearing the parties to such application, and all other parties interested therein; and upon satisfactory proof of such notice having been served on all parties interested full twenty-one days before the day of hearing, to proceed to alter the apportionment in such manner and in such proportion amongst the said lands as to them shall seem just, subject nevertheless to the consent of two justices of the peace, as in the said first-recited act provided; and further, that upon such application being made to the said tithe commissioners, they shall have the same power of making such alteration as by the said first-recited act and by this act is vested in the commissioners of land-tax, and that without any such consent of two justices of the peace; provided, that no alteration of any apportionment shall be made under the first-recited act or this act whereby any rent-charge shall be subdivided, so that any subdivision thereof shall be less than 5s.

15. And whereas it is expedient to make further provision for recording all such alterations of apportionment; be it enacted, That the registrar of every diocese, as soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this act, shall cause to be made and sent to the office of the tithe commissioners a copy, certified under his hand, of every instrument of altered apportionment in his custody which was made before the passing of this act, the reasonable cost of making and sending which copy shall be defrayed by the tithe commissioners as part of the expense of putting in execution the acts for the commutation of tithes; and after the passing of this act three counterparts shall be made of every instrument of altered apportionment at the expense of the land owner desiring the alteration, and two of the said counterparts shall be sent as provided by the first-recited act, and the third shall be sent to or deposited in the office of the tithe commissioners, or, after the expiration of the tithe commission, shall be sent to and kept by the person having custody of the records and papers of the said commission, and shall be annexed to the instrument of apportionment in the custody of the said commissioners, or the person having the custody of their records and papers.

16. That in case any land charged with one amount of rent-charge shall belong to two or more land owners in several portions, and the owner of any one of such portions, or his tenant, shall have paid the whole of such rent-charge, or any portion thereof greater than shall appear to him to be his just proportion, and contribution thereto shall have been refused or neglected to be made by any other of the said land owners, or his tenant, after a demand in writing made on them, or either of them, for that purpose, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace acting for the county or other jurisdiction in which the land is situated, upon the complaint of any such land owner, or his tenant or agent, to summon the owner so refusing or neglecting to make such contribution, or his tenant, to appear before any two or more such justices of the peace, who, upon proof of the demand and of service of the summons, as hereinafter provided, whether or not the party summoned shall appear, shall examine into the merits of the complaint, and determine the just proportion of the rent-charge so paid as aforesaid which ought to be contributed by the land owner of such other portion of the said land, and by order under their hands and seals shall direct the payment by him of what shall in their judgment be due and payable in respect of such liability to contribution, with the reasonable costs and charges of such proceedings, to be ascertained by such justices; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the complainant to take the like proceedings for enforcing payment of the said amount of contribution and costs, and with the like restriction as to the arrears recoverable, as are given to the owner of the rent-charge by the said first-mentioned act or this act for enforcing payment of the rent-charge.

17. That service of the said demand in writing, and summons, or of any notice to distrain, or copy of writ to assess the arrears of rent-charge, or notice of the execution thereof under the said first-recited act, or the several acts to amend the same, or this act, upon any person occupying or residing on the land chargeable with the rent-charge, or in case no person shall be found thereon, then affixing the same in some conspicuous place on the land, shall be deemed good service of any such summons, notice, writ, or other proceeding.

18. That it shall be lawful for all defendants in replevin, brought on any distress for rent-charge payable under the said first-recited act, or the several acts to amend the same, or this act, to avow or make cognizance generally that the lands and tenements whereon such distress was made were chargeable with or liable to the payment of a certain yearly amount of rent-charge under the provisions of the statutes for the commutation of tithes in England and Wales, which rent-charge, or some part thereof, was in arrear and unpaid for the space of twenty-one days next after some half-yearly day of payment thereof, and after ten days' notice in writing, as required by the said acts, and that a certain amount of such rent-charge, according to the prices of corn, as directed by the said acts, was at the time of the said distress due to the person entitled to the rent-charge.

19. That where any distress shall be made for any rent-charge payable under the said recited acts or any of them, or this act, and justly due, and any irregularity or unlawful act shall be afterwards done by the party distraining, or his agent, in the conduct, sale, or disposition of the distress, the distress itself shall not be therefore deemed to be unlawful, nor the party making it deemed a trespasser from the beginning, but the party aggrieved by such unlawful act or irregularity may recover full satisfaction for the special damage in an action upon the case; provided nevertheless, that no plaintiff shall recover in any action for any such unlawful act or irregularity, if ten days' notice in writing shall not have been given to the defendant by the plaintiff of his intention to bring such action before the commencement thereof, or if tender of sufficient amends has been made by the party distraining, or his agent, before such action brought, or if after action brought a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court, with costs, by or on behalf of the defendant.

20. That this act shall be construed with and as part of the first-recited act, as amended by the several acts passed for the amendment thereof and by this act; and that all provisions in any of the said acts relating to land of copyhold tenure shall apply to land of customary tenure, or any other tenure subject to arbitrary fine; and that all provisions in the said acts or in this act relating to glebe land shall apply to all land holden by any spiritual person in right of his benefice.

LONDON, AUGUST 27, 1842.

As the County Courts Bill was withdrawn for the express purpose of allowing it to be considered during the recess of Parliament, and as we are to presume that the opinions of the Profession on this most important Bill will not be considered undeserving attention, we feel that we shall be justified in returning to it perhaps on more than one occasion; and we shall now address ourselves to a point on which we slightly touched in a former Number, in commenting on one of the preceding County Courts Bills.

It does not appear that the present Bill, any more than any of its predecessors, contemplates bringing justice home to the poor man's door in matters of equitable jurisdiction. The remedies, such as they are, appear exclusively destined for legal rights; pleas of personal actions for debt or damage not exceeding 20*l.*; actions of replevin; certain remedies for recovering possession of tenements &c. are noticed; but not one word is to be found affecting such matters as the administration of the estates of deceased persons, for the benefit of creditors or legatees; construing and carrying trusts into effect; enforcing the specific performance of contracts; injunctions to restrain the doing of acts, which, being done, cannot be adequately compensated for in damages; and the like matters falling within the circle of equitable jurisdiction.

Suppose A. sells a horse to B. for 19*l.*, and then B., finding it defective, returns it, and demands back his money: it is in contemplation that he shall have a remedy by action in the County Court, because it is a great hardship to impose on him the necessity of proceeding for so trifling an amount, under the expensive process of one of the superior Courts. But if A. dies intestate, leaving 100*l.*, and it is uncertain who are his next of kin, his administrator and the claimants are not to have any tribunal to which they can resort, short of the inaccessible Court of Chancery, to ascertain who are the parties entitled, and to administer the property; or if, instead of dying intestate, he makes his will, and bequeaths his 100*l.* to his married daughter, in such form as to give her only an equitable chose in action; or if he bequeaths it on any trusts of intricacy; the County Courts Bill provides no cheap judicial process for enforcing, in the first case, the payment to the husband, subject to his making an equitable settlement on the wife, or, in the second, for a due administration of the trusts. Again: suppose A. contracts to build a wall for B. for 20*l.*, it is thought by the framers of this Bill important to give B. a cheap remedy in the County Court against A., if he does not fulfil his contract. But if the contract were for the sale to B. of a freehold field, then he is to be left with no better remedy than he has now; that is, practically with none; for of course, if it be imprudent, on account of the expenditure of time and money, to litigate in a court of law, where the sum in question does not exceed 20*l.*, it would be absolutely frantic madness to go into the Court of Chancery.

Why there is in all the Bills for County Courts this omission of all equitable remedies, we have never been able to conjecture. We are not indeed ourselves among those who have much opinion of the general principle of what is termed cheap justice, that is, very summary, coarse adjudication in trifling disputes. We have always, we believe, in common with the great majority of the profession, felt inclined to the opinion, that trifling disputes are best settled out of Court, and that the inducement offered by cheap justice, even if bona fide justice can be at all obtained at a cheap rate, to incessant petty litigation, and to the generation and employment of a most pernicious class of legal agents, will far outweigh the supposed advantages of a judicial determination. But still if the settlement of trifling rights is to be arrived at by judicial process, the application of the principle should not be confined to one, and that perhaps not the largest class of rights; and while the law recognises, as it does, equitable as well as legal rights and liabilities in respect of small amounts of property, there seems no conceivable reason why it should provide remedies for such legal rights, on the ground of the inconvenience of attaining them in the Superior Courts, and refuse remedies for equitable rights, which it is not merely inconvenient, but absolutely impossible to obtain in the Superior Courts of Equity.

The justice of the poor man's claim to cheap equity as well as to cheap law, can hardly, we think, be contested. It cannot be denied that equitable questions arise to a considerable extent in regard to very trifling amounts of property. Indeed, it is by no means an unfrequent occurrence with equity lawyers, to find it their duty to advise clients against litigation in the Court of Chancery, on the sole ground of the smallness of the property in contest. Neither can it be denied that it must be as important to the poor man to have justice administered to him in regard to his equitable rights, as it is in regard to his legal rights. The only question then is, whether the practical difficulty of framing Courts to administer cheap equity, so far exceeds that of framing them to administer cheap law, as to render it expedient to withhold the former, while the latter is conceded. And we confess we see no such superior difficulty.

First, with regard to the Judge: any individual at all competent by his general legal acquirements to administer the law in a County Court, will in a short space of time acquire, if he does not before his appointment possess, sufficient knowledge of equity to administer it in such matters as would be brought before him. Secondly, as to the proceedings: if the only plan hitherto at all patronized by the Legislature for attaining cheapness, be adopted, viz. the abolition of pleadings, as well as of barristers and attorneys, then there seems to be scarcely any more difficulty in adapting County Courts for equitable than for legal jurisdiction. It would seem merely requisite to invest such Courts with the power of entertaining suits touching such matters as constitute the subject of suits in Equity, and to require them in such matters, to hear and determine according to the principles adopted by the superior Courts of Equity. If on the other hand, the Legislature shall find, as we trust it will, that pleadings cannot be dispensed with, then the framing of such short forms of pleadings for suits in Equity, as will at once suffice to bring the matter of the suit, and no more, properly before the Court, and at the same time avoid much expense, will of course be a matter of no small difficulty; but it does not seem a difficulty more absolutely insurmountable than that of reducing in the same ratio pleadings in actions at law. The plaintiff might, for instance, file a short bill, simply stating the ground of complaint in paragraphs, numbered as the interrogatories of a bill in Chancery are now numbered, and praying general relief. To this the defendant might be required to put in upon oath an answer denying, admitting, or ignoring the facts alleged, by reference to the numbers of the allegations. Thus, for instance, "the defendant denies wholly the truth of the allegation numbered 1; he admits the truth of the allegation numbered 2; and as to all the other allegations in the bill, he is ignorant." To compensate for the deficiency of such a mode of pleading, and for sifting the conscience of a contumacious defendant, so as to prevent evasion and elicit the whole truth, the court might have power at the hearing to question him on the matters contained in his answer, at the same time protecting him, both in respect to his answer and to his examination, against making admissions tending to expose him to penalties and forfeitures. No such things as demurrers, pleas, exceptions, or any dilatory pleadings, could of course be admitted; and the evidence of witnesses would be taken viva voce.

In suits of a purely administrative character, or in amicable suits instituted solely for the purpose of having a judicial opinion on some point or points of difficulty in the construction of a will or deed, perhaps hardly any pleadings would be requisite. The parties might be permitted to submit a short statement of the point in dispute, and on that, and on inspection of the instruments in which it occurred, the cause might be heard.

In throwing out these very general observations and propositions, we wish not to be understood as absolutely advocating petty Local Courts for the administration of cheap equity; we merely seek to call the attention of the Profession to the consideration of this question, whether, if Local Courts are to be established, and if cheap justice is to be administered to the poorer classes of suitors, a provision ought not to be made for adjudicating upon their equitable as well as on their legal interests. If, as we have asserted, it be incontestable that, in the administration of deceased persons' estates, in the execution of trusts, in the construction of wills, in the due performance of contracts, and such-like equities, difficulties exist to a very large extent in reference to such amounts of property as are possessed by the humbler classes; and if it be true that to provide for adjudication in such matters, is in reference to a similar provision for adjudicating on legal rights, and is a question only of the degree of difficulty, why in the name of common sense should the Legislature treat legal rights as alone deserving a cheap remedy, and pay no more attention to equitable ones than if they had no existence at all? Why draw an impassable line of distinction?

ORDERS ISSUED BY THE LORD CHANCELLOR.

By a General Order, made in the matter of the suitors of the Court of Chancery, dated 8th July, 1842, it was ordered, that, in the execution of the orders of the court, directing any annual payment to be made out of interest or dividends to accrue after the 5th April, 1842, upon such of the funds standing in the name of the Accountant-General, whereon the cashiers of the Bank of England should receive the interest, after a deduction of 7d. for every 20s. of the accumulated amount thereof, in pursuance of the act therein mentioned, the Accountant-General should draw only for so much of the same as should be the amount thereof, after deducting the said duty imposed by the said act, except in cases in which the court order expressly otherwise.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.—July 15.

Whereas, by an order of the Lord Chancellor, made on the 28th of June last, it was therein directed that all drafts for dividends, under any bankrupt's estate, which had been delivered to any official assignee by the Accountant in Bankruptcy, for more than six calendar months, the same having been previously signed by such Accountant, but which had not been issued to any creditor of such estate, should be forthwith brought by such official assignee, together with a separate list thereof under each estate, to any one or more of the commissioners of her Majesty's Court of Bankruptcy, who should thereupon be at liberty to cancel the same, and to direct such several lists to be filed with the proceedings of the respective bankruptcies: And whereas the said order further authorized any one or more of the said commissioners to make such order or orders as should be necessary for the preparation of a new draft or drafts for the dividend or dividends due to any such creditor or creditors, upon his or their applying for the same, and directed that such new drafts should be prepared in the form described in schedule B, annexed to the order of the Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal, dated 31st October, 1835, and should be signed and countersigned in the same manner as the original draft, and afterwards paid by some one of the cashiers of the Bank of England, out of the monies standing to the credit of the general account of the Accountant in Bankruptcy.

We do therefore order, that, on the application of a creditor for any dividend or dividends, the official assignee of the estate from which such dividend is payable, shall, if satisfied that the creditor is entitled to receive it, and upon the production of the securities (if any) exhibited on the proof of the debt, make a new draft [Here follows the form of draft, which creditors on applying for their dividends may get at every official assignee's office in London.] And which draft shall be left with one of the commissioners, who will compare it with the list of cancelled drafts filed with the proceedings; and, if correct, make an order upon the draft, directing the Accountant in Bankruptcy to sign the same, which the said Accountant will afterwards return to the official assignee of that estate; and when so signed and countersigned by the official assignee, may then be issued to the creditor, or to some party duly authorized by him on signing a receipt for the dividend.

PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES.

5 & 6 VICTORIA.—SESSION 2.

CAP. LVII.

An Act to continue until the 31st day of July, 1847, and to the End of the then next Session of Parliament; the Poor Law Commission; and for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England. [30th July, 1842.]

Whereas by an act passed in the 5 Will. 4, [c. 76], intitled "An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales," provision was made for the appointment of poor-law commissioners, assistant commissioners, secretaries, and other officers, and for their continuance in office until the end of the session of parliament held next after the 14th August, 1839, and by other acts passed respectively in the 3, 4, & 5 Vict. provision was made for their further continuance in office until 31st July, 1842, and it is expedient to extend such provisions; be it therefore enacted &c., That every poor-law commissioner appointed by his late Majesty, or appointed or to be appointed by her Majesty the Queen, her heirs and successors, and every assistant commissioner, secretary, and other officer and person duly appointed by the poor law commissioners, shall be empowered (unless he shall previously resign or be removed) to hold his office, and exercise the powers thereof, until the 31st July, 1847, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of parliament; and until the expiration of the said period it shall be lawful for her Majesty, her heirs and successors, from time to time, at pleasure, to remove any of the said commissioners for the time being, and upon every or any vacancy in the number of commissioners, either by removal or by death or otherwise, to appoint by warrant under the royal sign manual some other fit person to the said office, and until such appointment it shall be lawful for the surviving or continuing commissioner or commissioners to act as if no such vacancy had occurred.

2. And whereas by the said first-recited act it is provided, that it shall not be lawful for the poor-law commissioners to appoint more than nine assistant commissioners to act at any one time, unless the Lord High Treasurer, or the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, for the time being, or any three or more of them, shall consent to the appointment of a greater number; be it enacted and provided, That after the 31st day of December in the year 1842 it shall not be lawful in any case for the poor-law commissioners to appoint or continue in office more than nine assistant commissioners to act in England and Wales: Provided always, that after the passing of this act, whenever it may seem fitting to the said commissioners, or whenever they may be thereunto required by her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, the said commissioners, with the consent of the Lord High Treasurer or the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being, or any three of them, shall appoint some person, being a doctor in medicine, a barrister at law, a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of London or Dublin, an architect or surveyor, and not being one of the assistant commissioners as aforesaid, or some two or more of such persons, to act either in England or Ireland as an assistant commissioner or assistant commissioners, for the purpose of conducting any special inquiry, for a period not exceeding thirty days; and the said commissioners shall delegate to every person so appointed for the purpose of conducting such inquiry all such of the powers of the said commissioners as they may deem necessary or expedient, for summoning witnesses and conducting such inquiry; and every such appointment shall be subject to the approval of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State; and every person so appointed as aforesaid to conduct any special inquiry shall, before he enter on the execution of his duties, take the following oath before one of the judges of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench or Common Pleas, or one of the barons of the Exchequer in England or Ireland, as the case may be:

'I, A. B. do swear, that I will faithfully and honestly, according to the best of my skill and judgment, inquire into all matters and things which I may be lawfully directed to examine into, and will truly and impartially report thereon.' And it shall not be necessary to notify the appointment of any such person, or the taking of the oath aforesaid, otherwise than by publishing a notification of the same in the London Gazette, and by signifying the same, under the seal of the said commissioners, to the clerk of the peace of the county or counties within which the inquiry in question is to be made: Provided always, that if any person be charged with any misconduct in any matter relating to the administration of the law for the relief of the poor, and if any such special inquiry aforesaid be directed to be made into such charge, the person bringing such charge shall be entitled to make the same at such inquiry by his counsel or attorney, and the person charged with such misconduct shall be entitled to make his defence at such inquiry by his counsel or attorney; but nothing herein contained shall release any person charged with any misconduct or bringing any charge of misconduct, from the liability to be himself examined at any such inquiry in respect of the matter of such charge, in the same manner and subject to the same penalties as under the said first-recited act.

3. That whenever any general rule of the said commissioners shall be in force, it shall not be lawful for the said commissioners to issue any particular rule, order, or regulation, addressed to any single parish or union, by which such general rule or any part thereof would be rescinded or suspended, unless one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State has first signified to the said commissioners his approval of such particular rule in writing.

4. That every order of the said commissioners suspending or dismissing any paid officer from the exercise of his office, in which the said commissioners shall declare that the urgency of the case requires that such order should take effect within the period of fourteen days, shall come into force at such time as the said commissioners shall in such order direct, notwithstanding that fourteen days shall not have expired since a written or printed copy of the same shall have been sent by the said commissioners, as required by the first-recited act.

5. That it shall be lawful for the guardians of any parish or union, subject always to the powers of the poor-law commissioners, to prescribe a task of work to be done by any person relieved in any workhouse, in return for the food and lodging afforded to such person; but it shall not be lawful to detain any person against his will for the performance of such task of work for any time exceeding four hours from the hour of breakfast in the morning succeeding the admission of such person into the workhouse; and if any such person, while in such workhouse, refuse or neglect to perform such task of work suited to his age, strength, and capacity, or wilfully destroy or injure his own clothes, or damage any of the property of the board of guardians, he shall be deemed an idle and disorderly person within the meaning of an act passed in the 5 Geo. 4, [c. 83, s. 3], intitled "An Act for the Punishment of idle and disorderly Persons, and Rogues and Vagabonds, in that Part of Great Britain called England."

6. That every board of guardians appointed under the provisions of the said first-recited act, or acting under the regulations of the said commissioners for the relief of the poor, and the relieving officers of such guardians, shall have the like powers as overseers have with respect to insane persons under the provisions of an act passed in the 9 Geo. 4, [c. 40], intitled "An Act to amend the Laws for the Erection and Regulation of County Lunatic Asylums, and more effectually to provide for the Care and Maintenance of Pauper and Criminal Lunatics in England," or of any act or acts passed to amend the same; and every such board of guardians shall from time to time pay or cause to be duly paid to the treasurer, managers, or keepers of any county lunatic asylum, public hospital, or licensed house respectively, all costs lawfully due in respect of any poor person maintained in such county lunatic asylum, public hospital, or licensed house; and if such costs shall not be duly paid by such board of guardians or overseers of the parish to which such poor person may have been chargeable according to the provisions of the said recited acts, then and in such case it shall be lawful for any two justices to proceed to the recovery of the said costs, by making and enforcing an order for the same on the overseers of the aforesaid parish, according to the provisions of the said recited acts; and it shall be lawful for any such board of guardians to contract with any person duly licensed to practise as a medical man to certify as to the state and condition of insane persons under the provisions of the last-recited act; and whenever any insane person is relieved by any such board of guardians or any of their officers, the relieving officer within whose district the parish is situate to which such person may be chargeable, or in which such person may be found destitute, shall give the like information to some justice of the peace acting for the division of the county within which such parish is situated as is required by the said act of 9 Geo. 4 of overseers, and subject to the like penalties for neglect; and the clerk to every such board of guardians shall on the 15th August in every year, or as soon after as may be, make out and sign two true and faithful lists of all insane persons chargeable to the parish or union in the form in the schedule hereunto annexed, and shall on or before the 1st September next succeeding transmit one copy of such list to the clerk of the peace acting in and for the county within which the parish to which each such insane person is chargeable is situated, or to his deputy, to be by him laid before the justices acting for such county at their next general quarter sessions, and the other copy of such list to the said commissioners; and from and after the passing of this act the overseers of any such parish, or of any parish within any such union, shall not be required to make the annual return required of them by the said act of the reign of King George the Fourth.

7. That whenever the whole of any parish or parishes is situated at a greater distance than four miles from the place of meeting of the board of guardians of the union of which such parish or parishes may form part, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, on the application of the board of guardians, to form such parish or parishes into a district, and to direct the said guardians from time to time to appoint a committee of their members to receive applications of poor persons requiring relief in such district, to examine into the cases of such poor persons, and to report to the said guardians thereon.

8. That in case any question shall arise as to the right of any person to act as an elective guardian, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, if they shall see fit, to inquire into the circumstances of the case, and to issue such order or orders therein, under their hands and seal, as they may deem requisite for determining the question; and no such order shall be liable to be removed by writ of certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench unless the application for such writ shall be made during the term next after the issuing of such order.

9. That if any person put in nomination for the office of guardian tender to the officer conducting the election of guardians his refusal in writing to serve such office, the election of guardians, so far as regards such person, shall be no further proceeded with.

10. That in every case in which no person shall be elected for the office of guardian in any parish at any annual election of guardians, the persons elected for the previous year may continue to act as guardians until the next annual election.

11. That the said commissioners may accept the resignation of any person elected as a guardian tendered for any cause which the commissioners may deem reasonable; and in every case of omission to elect, or of vacancy in any board of guardians, by death, resignation, or disqualification, the said commissioners shall be and shall be deemed to have been empowered to order a new election for the completion of such board.

12. That in case the full number of guardians shall not be or shall not have been elected at any election of guardians, or in case of any vacancy in any board of guardians by the death, removal, resignation, refusal, or disqualification to act of any elected guardian, the other or remaining members of the said board, being not less than three, shall be and be deemed to have been competent to act until the next election, or until the completion of the said board, as if the number of such board were complete, and that no acts or proceedings shall be liable to be questioned on account of any failure to elect any guardian or guardians, or on account of any vacancy as aforesaid.

13. That no defect in the qualification or election of any person acting as a guardian at a board of guardians, the majority of persons assembled at which shall be entitled to act as guardians, shall be deemed to vitiate or make void any proceedings of such board in which he may have taken part.

14. That no person, during the time for which he may serve or hold the office of assistant overseer of any parish, nor any paid officer engaged in the administration of the laws for relief of the poor, nor any person who, having been a paid officer, shall have been dismissed within five years previously from such office, under the provisions of the said first-recited act, shall be capable of serving as a guardian; and no person receiving any fixed salary or emolument from the poor-rates in any parish or union shall be capable of serving as a guardian in such parish or union.

15. And whereas doubts have been entertained whether justices of the peace who are ex-officio members of boards of guardians of parishes or unions under the provisions of the first-recited act can lawfully act as justices of the peace in cases in which the guardians of such parishes or unions are complainants, or are otherwise interested or concerned, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed; be it therefore enacted, That no justice of the peace shall be disabled from acting as such justice at any petty or special or general or quarter sessions in any matter merely on the ground that such justice of the peace is an ex-officio member of any board of guardians complaining, interested, or concerned in such matter, or has acted as such at any meeting of such board of guardians.

16. That it shall be lawful for every board of guardians constituted under the said first-recited act to accept, take, and hold, on behalf of the union or parish respectively for which they may act, any lands, buildings, goods, effects, or other property as a corporation, and in all cases to sue and be sued in their corporate name.

17. That wherever a board of guardians is empowered to make any order, or to prefer any complaint, claim, or application, before justices or otherwise, if any such board resolve to make such order, or to prefer such complaint, claim, or application, a copy of the minute of such resolution, signed by the presiding chairman of such board, and sealed with their seal, and countersigned by their clerk, or person acting as their clerk, shall be deemed and taken to be sufficient proof of the making of such order, or of the preferring of such complaint, claim, application, or otherwise, as the case may be; and that whenever, either for the purpose of making an order for the removal of a pauper, or on the trial of an appeal against such order, or for any other purpose, it shall be necessary to prove to what parish a pauper has become chargeable, (if in such parish the laws for the relief of the poor shall be administered by a board of guardians or a district board), a certificate of such pauper having so become chargeable, signed, sealed, and countersigned as aforesaid, shall be sufficient proof to what parish and at what time such pauper became and was chargeable, unless the contrary shall be proved by other legal evidence; and that in all cases in which the guardians of any parish or union are or may hereafter be empowered to make any application or complaint, or to take any proceedings before any justices at petty or special or general or quarter sessions, it shall be lawful for any officer of such guardians empowered by any board of such guardians, by an order in writing, under the hand of the presiding chairman of such board, and sealed with the common seal of such guardians, to make such application or complaint, or to take such proceedings on behalf of such guardians, as effectually to all intents and purposes as if the same were made or taken by such guardians, or any of them, in person.

18. That the said act of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, [c. 76.] and the act passed in the 5 & 6 Will. 4, [c. 69.] intitled "An Act to facilitate the Conveyance of Workhouses and other Property of Parishes and of Incorporations of Parishes in England and Wales," and the act passed in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, [c. 96.] intitled "An Act to regulate Parochial Assessments," and so much of an act passed in the 1 & 2 Vict. [c. 56.] intitled "An Act for the more effectual Relief of the destitute Poor in Ireland," as relates to the style of the poor-law commissioners, their appointment, the delegation of powers to one of their number, the sittings of their board, their common seal, and the residence of one of their number in Ireland, and all acts to amend or extend any of the said acts, or the said provisions of the act last recited, and the present act, shall (except so far as the provisions of any former act shall be expressly altered or amended by the provisions of any subsequent act) be construed as one act; and that in each and every such act (except the said act for the more effectual relief of the destitute poor in Ireland) the words "auditor," "guardian," "justice or justice of the peace," "oath," "officer," "overseer," "owner," "rack-rent," "parish," "person," "poor," "poor laws," "laws for relief of the poor," "poor rate," "general quarter sessions," "union," "united workhouse," "vestry," "workhouse," and words importing the singular number or the masculine gender only, shall be interpreted as is provided in the first-recited act; and that the provisions of the said first-recited act shall extend to every rule, order, or regulation directed or authorized to be made by the said commissioners under the provisions of an act passed in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, [c. 86.] intitled "An Act for registering Births, Deaths, and Marriages in England," or by an act passed in the 3 & 4 Vict.

[c. 29], intituled "An Act to extend the Practice of Vaccination."

19. That, except so far as is hereinbefore expressly excepted, and so far as the continuance in office or appointment of the said commissioners, their assistant commissioners, secretary, assistant secretaries, and other officers and persons appointed by them, and their removal, no part of this act shall extend to Ireland.

20. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this present session of parliament.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 3, 1842.

OUR readers are doubtless well acquainted with those rules of pleading, whose object it is to confine the parties in an action as much as possible to a single point in dispute, and to prevent what is termed a multiplicity of issues. These were at one time so stringent, that, although a defendant might have several answers to the complaint which was made against him, he could only avail himself of one of them; and had to select for his single plea that upon which he thought he could most safely rely. In respect to pleas, however, the rule was very early relaxed; and a statute enabled a defendant, by leave of the Court, to plead more than one plea. But the reservation, that the thus making use of more than one ground of defence should be subject to the control of the Court, and not be at the absolute discretion of the party, proves, that the English law did not consider this mode of pleading inconsistent with justice. We have mentioned, that the statute only authorized more than one plea. According to the construction which was put upon it, it did not extend to any subsequent pleading; and, therefore, if a defendant set up a defence embracing a number of disputed facts, the plaintiff could not, except in the instance we shall presently notice, deny the truth of more than one. The exception was, that, in actions of trespass and upon the case for an injury, a plaintiff, subject to certain rules which are laid down in the well-known Croft's case, might, by a compendious form of replication, called, from the words which were used, the replication de injuria, put in issue all the material facts alleged in the plea. And in actions of debt and upon the case for a breach of promise, the want of such a replication was not then obvious; for before the alterations in pleading, which were caused by the New Rules, most of the subject-matters of defence in those actions could be given in evidence under the general issue. But with the New Rules came the practice of pleading long special pleas, stating a variety of facts, the whole of which a defendant would formerly have been obliged to prove at the trial. It was then seen, that, unless the plaintiff was allowed to adopt some form of replication which should put in issue all the material allegations of the plea, he would be placed in a worse position than formerly, and the benefit which the New Rules gave to him of being made acquainted before the trial, with the precise grounds of the defence, would be neutralised by the disadvantage of being obliged to admit all but one of the facts.

An attempt was therefore made to introduce in actions of assumpsit, and more recently in actions of debt, a replication of a similar nature to that, the use of which in other actions had been established by Croft's case. It is not our purpose now to trace the steps by which it came at last to be agreed that such a replication might be used; we wish to call attention to another point, to which this change in the mode of pleading has given a greater importance than it before had. Although a plaintiff may, if he please, use the replication de injuria, he is not obliged to do so, but may deny one of the allegations of the plea; and in some instances the rules which have been laid down with respect to this replication forbid its being used. It becomes a matter of some moment, therefore, to settle how far the traversing one of the allegations of a pleading, involves an admission of the truth of the rest. And here we may observe, that the admission, whatever it may be, applies only to those allegations which are material to the matter in issue. As the rules of pleading forbid a party from traversing an immaterial allegation, his not doing so ought to have no effect against him.

With respect, then, to the effect of omitting to traverse a material averment in a pleading, we shall first notice the case of Edmunds v. Groves, (2 Mee. & W.

642), which is the principal authority for one view of the subject. There, in assumpsit by the indorsee against the maker of a promissory note, it was pleaded, that the consideration for which the defendant made the note was money lost by gaming, and that it was indorsed to the plaintiff with a notice thereof, without value or consideration, and issue was joined on a replication that the note was indorsed to the plaintiff without notice of the illegality, and for good and sufficient value and consideration. At the trial no evidence was given on either side, and a verdict having been entered for the plaintiff by the judge's direction, it was argued, on moving for a nonsuit, that "by the form in which the plaintiff has chosen to reply, he has admitted the allegation in the plea, that the note was given for a gaming debt." The court refused a rule, Lord Abinger, C. B., and Bolland, B., founding their opinion on the ground that the onus probandi was on the defendant, and giving no opinion as to the effect of an admission on the record. But Mr. Baron Alderson in his judgment thus expresses himself:—"An admission on the record is merely a waiver of requiring proof of those parts of the record which are not denied, the party being content to rest his claim on the other facts in dispute; but if any inferences are to be drawn by the jury, they must have the facts from which such inferences are to be drawn proved like any other facts." And the same learned judge also observed in the course of the argument, "that the pleadings are not before the jury, but only the issue." From these dicta may be collected that view of an admission on the record which gives to it the least effect, and according to which the taking issue upon one fact in the pleading is, not that the party admits the rest to be true, but that he agrees that the cause shall be decided by the truth or falsehood of that fact, in the same manner as he might agree for it to be decided by the happening of any other event.

The case of Bennion v. Davison, (3 Mee. & W. 179), although it was decided on the ground of the immateriality of the averment, also affords several dicta upon this subject. For instance, Mr. Baron Alderson says—"Is not the substance of the plea rather this—that the defendants protesting they are not owners, yet say they made no such contract? It is no more than a waiver of proof; as if they had said, We will not put you to prove that we are owners, if you can prove a contract with us." And again he says—"It is clear that this averment, being an immaterial one, was not admitted; but it is not to be taken for granted, that, if it had been material, there was an admission of it as a fact to go to the jury." And Parke, B., says—"It is not necessary to say more than this as to the effect of an admission on the record, that, at all events, the taking issue on one fact averred in the declaration is only an admission of the other material averments necessary to be proved." So far, then, this view of the question is supported only by the authority of Mr. Baron Alderson; and we shall find the Court of Queen's Bench, in the next case which is reported, coming to a different conclusion. This was Bingham v. Stanley, (1 Gale & Dav. 237; ante, p. 389). It was an action of assumpsit against the drawer of a check, who pleaded, that it was drawn and delivered to a third person to secure a gaming debt, and by him delivered to the plaintiff without consideration, and the plaintiff replied, that it was delivered to him for a good consideration. The Court observed that both Edmunds v. Groves and Bennion v. Davison were distinguishable from the case before them; the former, because the affirmative as to the plaintiff's knowledge was clearly alleged by the defendant, and therefore he was rightly put to prove it; and the latter because the allegation was an immaterial one; and they held, that the illegal drawing of the check was so admitted on the pleadings as to throw on the plaintiff the onus of proving the consideration. This case cannot be considered as decided otherwise than upon the ground that the admission on the record was equivalent to proof at the trial. It is true, that, according to the words of the issue, the affirmative is with the plaintiff, but a bill of exchange prima facie imports, that there was a consideration for the acceptance and indorsements, and the holder is not bound to shew it until proof has been given which throws suspicion upon the bill. If, therefore, according to the opinion of Mr. Baron Alderson, the facts contained in the untraversed allegation were not before the jury, the onus of proving the want of consideration for the indorsement to the plaintiff was upon the defendant, and it was only by giving to the admission on the record the effect of proof at the trial, that it could be taken from him and thrown upon the plaintiff.

Another recent case of Smith v. Martin (9 Mee. & W. 304) remains to be noticed. That was an action by an indorsee against the maker of a promissory note, and the plea alleged that the note was delivered to the plaintiff in violation of good faith, and in fraud and contempt of an order of reference, and that the plaintiff took the note with full knowledge of the premises. The replication only traversed the knowledge of the plaintiff; and it was contended, that, inasmuch as it admitted a fraudulent delivery to the plaintiff, he was bound to begin and prove consideration. The Court held, that it was for the defendant to begin; because, as in Edmunds v. Groves, he had averred affirmatively the plaintiff's knowledge; and it was observed also, that, supposing the circumstances of fraud to be admitted, they did not afford prima facie evidence of the plaintiff's knowledge. The case therefore cannot be considered as opposed to Bingham v. Stanley, except that Baron Alderson in his judgment reiterates his former opinion, and expresses his dissatisfaction with that decision.

Thus, it appears that, on the one side we have the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, and on the other the dictum of an eminently learned Judge, nor do we find any other case expressly in point. Serjeant Stephen in his Treatise on Pleading says, that "it is a rule that every pleading is taken to confess such traversable matters alleged on the other side as it does not traverse;" and similar expressions are used in several reported cases; but these do not assist us. That such expressions are properly used is not denied, the question being, whether they mean an admission for all the purposes of the cause, or merely a waiver of proof, the party being content to rest his claim upon the other facts in dispute. It is not for us to assume as a Court of Error to decide the point; and, in the present state of things, we shall only advise any of our readers with whom it may happen to arise, to shape their case according to the expressed opinion of the Court in which the action may be brought.

CAP. LXXIX.

An Act to repeal the Duties payable on Stage Carriages and on Passengers conveyed upon Railways, and certain other Stamp Duties in Great Britain, and to grant other Duties in lieu thereof; and also to amend the Laws relating to the Stamp Duties.

[5th August, 1842.]

Whereas by an act passed in the 2 & 3 Vict. [c. 66], intituled "An Act to reduce certain of the Duties now payable on Stage Carriages," certain duties contained in the schedule to the said act annexed were granted and imposed, and are now payable for and in respect of every mile which a stage carriage shall be licensed to travel: And whereas by an act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, [c. 120], intituled "An Act to repeal the Duties under the Management of the Commissioners of Stamps, on Stage Carriages, and on Horses let for Hire in Great Britain, and to grant other Duties in lieu thereof; and also to consolidate and amend the Laws relating thereto," certain duties contained in the schedule (A.) to the last-mentioned act annexed were granted for and in respect of every license for keeping, using, and employing any stage carriage, and for and in respect of all passengers conveyed for hire along any railway in Great Britain in or upon carriages drawn or impelled by the power of steam or otherwise: And whereas by an act passed in the 55 Geo. 3, [c. 184], intituled "An Act for repealing the Stamp Duties on Deeds, Law Proceedings, and other written or printed Instruments, and the Duties on Fire Insurances, and on Legacies and Successions to Personal Estate upon Intestacies, now payable in Great Britain; and for granting other Duties in lieu thereof," certain stamp duties were granted and imposed, amongst others, upon bills of lading and charter-parties in Great Britain, and upon instruments of collation, donation, presentation, and institution of and to any ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, or promotion in England, and upon certain licenses hereinafter mentioned; and it is expedient that all the said duties should be repealed, and others granted in lieu thereof; be it therefore enacted &c., that from and after the commencement of this act the aforesaid duties granted and imposed by the said act passed in the 2 & 3 Vict., for and in respect of every mile which any stage carriage shall be licensed to travel, and the aforesaid duties granted and imposed by the said act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, for and in respect of every license for keeping, using, or employing any stage carriage, and for and in respect of passengers conveyed for hire along any railway in Great Britain, and the duties hereinafter mentioned, granted and imposed by the said act passed in the 55 Geo. 3, (that is to say), the duty of 3s. upon any bill of lading of or for any goods, merchandise, or effects, to be exported or carried coastwise, and the several duties of 1*l.* 15*s.* and 1*l.* 5*s.* upon any charter-party, or any agreement or contract for the charter of any ship or vessel, or any memorandum, letter, or other writing between the captain, master, or owner of any ship or vessel, and any other person, for or relating to the freight or conveyance of any money, goods, or effects on board of such ship or vessel, and the several and respective duties of 20*l.* and 10*l.* upon any collation, donation, or presentation of or to any ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, or promotion in England, and the several and respective duties of 2*l.*, 30*l.*, and 15*l.*, upon any institution in and to any ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, or promotion in England, and the duty of 2*l.* upon any license which shall pass the seal of any archbishop, bishop, chancellor, or other ordinary, or of any ecclesiastical court in England, so far as relates to any license to hold a perpetual curacy in England, not proceeding upon a nomination, shall severally cease and determine, and the same shall be and are hereby repealed, save and except such of the said respective duties, or so much and such part or parts thereof respectively as shall have become due or payable or have been incurred before or upon the day appointed for the commencement of this act with regard to such duties respectively, all which said duties or parts of duties so due or incurred, or remaining to be paid as aforesaid, shall be recoverable by the same ways and means, and with and under the same penalties, and in the same manner in all respects as if this act had not been made.

2. That in lieu of the duties by this act repealed there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid unto and for the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, in and throughout Great Britain, for and in respect of every license for keeping, using, or employing any stage carriage in Great Britain, and for and in respect of every stage carriage, and for and in respect of the passengers conveyed upon any railway, and also for and in respect of the several instruments, matters, and things mentioned and described in the schedule to this act annexed, or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which such instruments, matters, and things, or any of them, shall be written or printed, the several duties or sums of money set down in figures against the same respectively, or otherwise specified and set forth in the same schedule; and that the said schedule shall be deemed and taken to be a part of this act; and that all the said duties shall be under the care and management of the commissioners of stamps and taxes for the time being, and shall be denominated and deemed to be stamp duties.

3. That the commissioners of stamps and taxes shall be and are hereby empowered and required to provide proper and sufficient stamps or dies for expressing and denoting the several duties hereby granted upon the vellum, parchment, or paper chargeable therewith, and to alter and renew the said stamps or dies from time to time as occasion shall require: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to use any of the stamps or dies heretofore provided to denote any former stamp duties for the purpose of expressing and denoting any of the duties hereby granted, and to use two or more stamps or dies for denoting any one duty, as occasion may require: Provided also, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, at any time within twelve calendar months next after the passing of this act, to cancel and allow, in the same manner as in the cases of stamps spoiled or rendered unfit for the purpose intended, all stamps for any of the instruments, matters, and things mentioned in the said schedule, which by the operation of this act shall have been rendered useless or unfit for the purpose for which the same were originally designed, and to deliver out in lieu thereof other stamps of the same value, or otherwise, at their discretion, to cause any additional stamp or stamps to be impressed on the vellum, parchment, or paper having thereon the stamp or stamps so hereby rendered useless or unfit, on payment of the duty to be denoted by such additional stamp or stamps.

4. That the proprietor or company of proprietors of every railway in Great Britain, and every other person who shall carry or convey, or cause to be carried or conveyed, any passenger for hire in or upon any railway in Great Britain, shall, from time to time and at all times, keep and enter or cause to be entered in a book or books to be kept for that purpose, in such manner and form as the commissioners of stamps and taxes shall direct or approve, a just and true account of all and every sum and sums of money which shall be received or charged daily by or for such proprietor or company or other person for the hire, fare, or conveyance of all such passengers as aforesaid, whether the same shall be received for the conveyance of passengers on the railway of such proprietor or company or other person only, or on such last-mentioned railway and any other railway, or on any such other railway only, and for or in respect of all which sums of money the duties charged by this act shall, in manner hereinafter directed, be paid by the said proprietor or company or other person so receiving or charging the same as aforesaid, without any deduction or abatement thereout on any account or pretence whatever; and the proprietor or company of proprietors of any railway so receiving or charging any such sums of money as aforesaid shall also in like manner keep and enter or cause to be entered an account of all sums of money paid or accounted for, or to be paid or accounted for, by such proprietor or company to the proprietor or company of proprietors of any other railway (specifying the same) upon which any of such passengers shall be carried or conveyed, as his or their share or proportion of any such sums of money so received or charged as aforesaid, or as or for or in the nature of toll or otherwise for the use of such last-mentioned railway, in the conveyance of such passengers; and the proprietor or company of proprietors of every such last-mentioned railway shall in like manner keep and enter or cause to be entered an account of all sums of money so paid or accounted for to him or them as last aforesaid, and for or in respect of which the duties shall or ought to have been paid as aforesaid by such first-mentioned proprietor or company; and every such proprietor and company and other person and persons respectively shall, within five days after the first Monday in every calendar month, deliver to the commissioners of stamps and taxes, or to the proper officer appointed for receiving the same, a true copy or true copies of the account or accounts by this act directed to be kept, so far as the same shall relate to all sums of money received or charged and paid or accounted for as aforesaid during the preceding four or five weeks, as the case may be; (that is to say), from and including the first Monday in the preceding month up to the first Monday of the month in which such account shall be rendered or ought to be rendered as aforesaid; and to and with every such account there shall be annexed and delivered an affidavit (to be taken before any one of her Majesty's justices of the peace) of such proprietor or other person as aforesaid, or of the secretary, chief clerk, or accountant of such proprietor or company or other person, stating that the deponent is well acquainted with the books and accounts of the said proprietor, company, or other person, and that he has examined and checked the same, and also the account to which such affidavit is annexed, and that to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief such last-mentioned account doth contain and is a true and faithful account of all and every sum and sums of money received or charged by or for such proprietor or company or other person aforesaid for the hire, fare, or conveyance of passengers on any railway during the period comprised in such account, and of all other matters and things required by this act to be contained in such account; and such proprietor or company or other person shall, at the time of delivering every such account, pay or cause to be paid to the Receiver-General of stamps and taxes, or to the officer authorized by the said commissioners to receive the same, for the use of her Majesty, the duties chargeable under this act for or in respect of all and every the sum and sums of money so received or charged as aforesaid, and contained or which ought to be contained in such account.

5. That it shall be lawful (where there shall be no express contract or agreement between the parties to the contrary) for any such proprietor or company to deduct from and retain out of the monies to be paid over to any such other proprietor or company as aforesaid, the amount of the duties by this act chargeable thereon, and which such proprietor or company receiving such monies shall have paid or be liable to pay.

6. That all and every the book and books of every such proprietor or company or other person, in which any account relating to such passengers, or to the money received or charged for the hire, fare, or conveyance of the same, or to any money received from or paid or accounted for to any other proprietor or company for such hire, fare, or conveyance as aforesaid, or a proportion thereof, or as or for such toll as aforesaid, shall be entered or kept, shall be open for the inspection and examination at all reasonable times of any officer or officers of stamp duties authorized by the commissioners of stamps and taxes in that behalf; and every such officer shall be at liberty to take copies of or extracts from any such book or account as aforesaid; and if any such proprietor or other person, or the secretary or accountant, or any clerk or officer of any such proprietor or company or person, having or keeping the custody or possession of any such book, or having power to produce the same, shall, upon demand made by any such officer, and upon producing and shewing his authority, refuse to permit such officer of stamp duties to inspect and examine such book, or to take copies thereof or extracts therefrom, or of or from any account entered or contained therein, or shall refuse to produce such book to such officer of stamp duties for his inspection and examination, every such person so offending shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of 50*l*.

7. That the proprietor or company of proprietors of every such railway, and every other person, before any passengers shall be conveyed or caused to be conveyed by him or them on any railway as aforesaid, shall give security, by bond, to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, with a condition that such proprietor or company, or other person as aforesaid, shall from time to time enter and keep, and cause to be kept and rendered, in the manner directed by this act, the accounts by this act required to be kept and rendered by such proprietor and company and persons respectively, containing and setting forth justly, truly, and faithfully all the several matters and things by this act required to be contained and set forth therein; and that such proprietor or company or person, and his or their secretary, accountant, and clerk, and every other person under or subject to his or their order, direction, or control, having the custody or possession of any books or book of such proprietor or company or other person as aforesaid, in which any account relating to any passengers conveyed upon any railway, or the money received, charged, accounted for, or paid for the hire, fare, or conveyance of the same, shall be contained or entered, shall from time to time, upon every reasonable request of any officer of stamp duties authorized as aforesaid, produce and shew to such officer, and permit him to inspect and examine the same, and to take copies thereof or extracts therefrom, and of and from any account entered or contained therein; and that such proprietor or company or other person aforesaid shall and will well and truly pay or cause to be paid, for the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, at the times and in manner directed by this act, all and every the duties which shall from time to time become chargeable under this act, and payable by him or them upon or for or in respect of the passengers, or the hire or fare or conveyance of the passengers, which shall be so conveyed as aforesaid along any railway; and that such proprietor or company, or other person aforesaid, shall well and truly do and perform, and cause to be done and performed, all such acts, matters, and things as by this act are required or directed to be done or performed by or on the part or behalf of such proprietors or company or other person; and every such bond shall be taken with sufficient sureties to the satisfaction of the commissioners of stamps and taxes, and in such sum as the said commissioners may judge to be reasonable and proper; and every such security shall be renewed from time to time, whenever and so often as such bond shall be forfeited, or as the parties to the same or any of them shall die, or become bankrupt or insolvent, or reside in parts beyond the seas, and also whenever and so often as the said commissioners shall in their discretion require the same to be renewed; and if any proprietor or company of proprietors of any such railway, or other person as aforesaid, shall convey or cause to be conveyed upon any railway any passengers for hire, without having first given such security by bond to her Majesty, in manner hereinbefore directed, or if any proprietor or company of proprietors of any railway shall permit or suffer any passengers to be conveyed for hire upon such last-mentioned railway, by any other person or company, before such other person or company shall have given security as aforesaid, and before a certificate, signed by the proper officer of stamp duties in that behalf, (which certificate such officer is hereby authorized and required to give), that such security hath been given, shall have been issued, or after notice in writing, signed by any authorized officer of stamp duties, and delivered to the secretary or chief clerk of the proprietor or company of proprietors of such railway, or left at the office of such railway with any clerk or officer there, that any such security ought, in pursuance of this act, to be renewed, or is required to be renewed, and before a certificate, signed as aforesaid, that the same has been renewed, shall have been issued; or if any such proprietor or company of proprietors, or other person, shall refuse or neglect to renew such security, whenever and so often as the same is or shall be by or in pursuance of this act be required to be renewed, such proprietor or company or person shall forfeit the sum of 100*l*., and the further sum of 100*l*. for every day during the period for which there shall be any refusal, neglect, or default to give or renew such security as aforesaid, or for every day on which any such passengers shall be permitted to be conveyed before such security shall be given or renewed, and a certificate thereof issued as aforesaid, according to the true intent and meaning of this act.

8. And whereas it is expedient to alter and amend the said act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4 in certain respects relating to licenses for stage carriages; be it therefore enacted, that from and after the commencement of this act every license for keeping, using, or employing any stage carriage (except an original license granted between the first Monday in October and the first day of November in any year) shall be dated on which the same shall be granted, and shall commence and have effect upon the same day, or any subsequent day, to be specified in such license as the day of the commencement thereof; provided, that no supplementary license shall be granted in lieu of any license which shall have been previously granted before the time appointed for the commencement of such last-mentioned license.

9. That whenever any person to whom any license in force to keep, use, or employ a stage carriage shall have been granted, shall be desirous of using or employing the said stage carriage upon any line of road other than that specified in such license, the commissioners of stamps and taxes, or their proper officer, upon application to them or him, as in other cases of supplementary licenses is required in pursuance of the said act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, shall grant to such person a supplementary license with such alteration or variation as aforesaid, as well as with any other alteration or variation, if required, as permitted by the last-mentioned act, upon payment of the duty hereby granted upon any supplementary license; and also whenever any person to whom a license to keep, use, or employ a stage carriage shall have been granted, shall die during the existence of such license in force, and shall leave a widow or a child of full age, and also whenever any woman to whom any such license shall have been granted shall marry during the existence of such license in force, and in any of such cases respectively such surviving widow, or the said child, or the husband of such woman, shall continue and carry on the business of such deceased person or of such woman respectively, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, or their proper officer, if they or he shall think fit, upon the application of any such widow or child or husband, as the case may be, and on his or her signing a requisition for that purpose, in such form as the said commissioners shall approve, and in the case of such deceased person, with the consent of his or her executor or administrator, to grant to such widow, child, or husband respectively a supplementary license in lieu of such pre-existing license so granted to such deceased person or such woman respectively, in the same manner and for the same purposes as any such supplementary license might have been or may be granted to such deceased person or such woman under the said act or this act in case he or she had not died or married respectively, upon payment of the duty by this act granted thereon; and every such supplementary license in any of the cases aforesaid, and the person to whom the same shall be granted, shall be under and subject to the same regulations and liabilities, and such person shall be entitled to the same advantages, as if this provision had been inserted and contained in the said act of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, and such supplementary license had been granted under the authority thereof; provided that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to authorize the granting of any such license, whether original or supplementary, to any person who shall not have attained the full age of twenty-one years.

10. And whereas by the said recited act of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, it is enacted, that a copy of every license to keep, use, or employ a stage carriage, and of every indorsement made thereon, shall be kept at the office or place from which such license shall be issued, in order that every person may have a copy thereof, paying 1s. for the same; and it is expedient that such copies, certified as hereinafter mentioned, should be received as evidence of the granting and of the contents of such licenses respectively, and of the indorsements thereon; be it therefore enacted, That the commissioners of stamps and taxes, or the officer by whom any such license shall have been granted, or other officer of stamp duties authorized by the said commissioners in that behalf, shall, upon application made to them or him for that purpose, deliver to the person requiring the same a copy of any such license, certified according to this act, on payment of the sum of 1s.; and in all proceedings and upon all occasions whatsoever a copy of, any such license, and of every indorsement thereon, (if any), the same being made and taken from the copy thereof filed or kept at such office or place as aforesaid, certified to be a true copy under the hand of one of the said commissioners, or of the officer by whom such license shall have been granted, or other officer authorized as aforesaid, upon proof made that such certificate hath been signed with the handwriting of a person described in or by such certificate as such commissioner or officer, and whom it shall not be necessary to prove to be a commissioner, shall be received as evidence, against any and every person appearing by such copy to be named in such license, that the same was duly granted by such person, and of the contents thereof, and of every indorsement thereon; and in any such case the said commissioners, or any of their officers, shall not be required or compellable to produce in any court, or at any place out of the office of the said commissioners or officers respectively, the original of any such license or indorsement, or any copy thereof filed or kept in any such office, or any entry or memorandum relating to such license in the books of the said commissioners or officers, or to give any other evidence or proof of the granting or contents of any such license or indorsement than such copy certified as aforesaid.

11. And whereas by the said last-mentioned act it is enacted, that if any carriage be found upon or near to any public highway, and any person shall ply for passengers to be conveyed by such carriage for hire at separate fares, such carriage not having placed and fixed thereupon the numbered plates required by the said act to be fixed on stage carriages, the driver of such carriage, or the person having the care thereof, or plying for passengers to be conveyed thereby, such driver or person not being the owner of such carriage, shall forfeit 10l., and if he be such owner, he shall forfeit 20l.; and moreover, that it shall be lawful for any constable or other peace officer, or any officer of stamp duties, without any warrant for that purpose, to apprehend such driver or other person, and to carry and convey him before any justice of the peace, to be dealt with as therein mentioned, and also to drive or take such carriage, with the horse or horses harnessed thereto or drawing the same, or to cause the same to be driven or taken to some public green-yard or some livery stables, or other place of safety, and there to lodge the same for safe custody until the determination of such justice shall be known; and such carriage, horse or horses, and harness, are thereby made liable to the payment of such penalty, and of such costs and expenses, or of such expenses only, as the case may be, as are therein mentioned; and it is expedient to amend the said provision by extending the same to the cases hereinafter mentioned; be it therefore enacted, that if any stage carriage, whether licensed or not, shall be used upon any public highway for the purpose of carrying or conveying any passengers, one or more of whom shall be charged or shall pay separate and distinct fares, or a separate and distinct fare, or at the rate of separate and distinct fares, for their respective places or seats, or his place or seat therein, or conveyance thereby, such carriage not having placed and fixed thereupon the numbered plates required by the said last-mentioned act to be fixed on stage carriages, the driver, and also the conductor or guard thereof, or other person having the direction, management, or care thereof, or assisting therein, shall forfeit the sum of 10l., or if he be the owner, the sum of 20l.; and moreover it shall be lawful for any officer of stamp duties, without any warrant for that purpose, with or without the aid and assistance of any constable or peace officer or other person, at any place where the journey for the performance of which such carriage shall be used shall terminate, or on the return of such carriage to the place from whence such journey commenced, to apprehend such driver, and such conductor, guard, or other person, and to carry and convey him before any justice of the peace having jurisdiction where the offence shall be committed, to be dealt with as hereinafter and as in the said last-mentioned act is mentioned; and it shall also be lawful for such officer of stamp duties, with or without such aid and assistance as aforesaid, to seize and take such carriage, with the horse or horses harnessed thereto, or drawing or having drawn the same, and to drive or take the same, or to cause the same to be driven or taken, to some public green-yard or some livery stables, or other place of safety, and there to lodge the same for safe custody until the determination of such justice shall be known; and such justice shall proceed therein as in the said last-mentioned act is provided in relation to the offences before described; and every such penalty respectively, and also such costs and expenses as in the said last-mentioned act are mentioned respectively, shall be levied and recovered by the same ways and means, and, if necessary, the offender committed for the same term or time as in the said last-mentioned act are in that behalf provided in relation to the aforesaid penalties thereby imposed: Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall in any way affect or alter, or be deemed to affect or alter, the provision contained in the said last-mentioned act, so far as the same relates to the offence hereinbefore described.

12. And whereas it is expedient that all mail coaches licensed to carry passengers for hire should have fixed thereon the usual numbered plates, in like manner as other stage carriages; be it therefore enacted, That so much of the said last-mentioned act as enacts that none of the regulations therein contained relating to the plates to be fixed upon any stage carriage shall extend to any mail coach employed in the service of the General Post-Office, built or constructed according to the regulations of the Postmaster-General, and not carrying more than four outside passengers, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

13. And whereas the repealing of the duties in respect of the passengers to be conveyed by stage carriages in Great Britain, and granting a uniform rate of duty on stage carriages in lieu thereof, will render certain regulations necessary for preventing the overloading of such carriages, and the dangers and inconveniences consequent thereon; be it therefore enacted, That no stage carriage shall be allowed to carry at one time a greater number of passengers in the whole, or in the inside or on the outside thereof, than the same is constructed to carry according to the regulations of this act; and that no such carriage shall be deemed to be constructed to carry a greater number of passengers than the same will contain at one time, upon fit and proper seats provided therein or thereupon for that purpose, allowing for every passenger, on an average, upon each and every separate seat, a space convenient for sitting thereon of sixteen inches, measuring in a straight line lengthwise on the front of each seat: Provided always, that no child under five years of age, sitting in the lap, shall be deemed a passenger within the meaning of this act.

14. That no stage carriage shall be used or employed until there shall be truly painted, in words at length, in legible and conspicuous Roman letters, one inch at the least in height, and of a proper and proportionate breadth, in a colour different from and opposite to the colour of the ground on which such letters shall be painted, and in one or more straight horizontal line or lines, upon some conspicuous part on the outside of such carriage, at the back thereof, and also to the inside thereof, and where the same shall be constructed to carry passengers in different compartments, then in each compartment, and so that the same shall be at all times plainly and distinctly visible and legible, the number of passengers which such carriage is constructed to carry according to this act in the whole, and on the outside and in the inside thereof respectively, and in each such compartment; and if any stage carriage shall be used or employed without having all and every such particulars painted thereon in manner aforesaid, or if any stage carriage shall be used or employed having thereon or in or on any part thereof any words or figures, or any particulars whatever, specifying or importing, or tending or intended to signify or import, that the same is constructed or in any way authorized to carry a greater number of passengers in the whole, or on the outside or in the inside thereof respectively, or in any compartment thereof, than the same is truly constructed to carry according to the regulations of this act, the proprietor thereof shall forfeit the sum of 10*l*.

15. That if the number of passengers at any one time conveyed in, upon, or about any stage carriage shall be greater in the whole, or upon or about the outside thereof, or in the inside thereof, or in any compartment thereof respectively, than the same is constructed to carry, according to the regulations of this act, or than any particulars painted thereon shall specify in the whole, or upon the outside thereof, or in the inside thereof, or in any compartment thereof respectively, the driver and conductor or guard thereof for the time being respectively shall forfeit the sum of 5*l*.

16. That it shall be lawful for any constable or peace officer at any time, and also for any person travelling or having immediately before travelled by any stage carriage, in any case where he shall have reason for believing or suspecting that a greater number of passengers are carried or are about to be carried, or have immediately before, or at any time during the journey last performed, been carried, by such stage carriage, to measure the seats or any of the seats in or upon such carriage, in order to ascertain the length thereof respectively, or the number of passengers which the said carriage is constructed to carry; and if any person shall refuse to permit the seats in or upon any such stage carriage to be measured, or shall by any means or in any way prevent or attempt to prevent any constable, peace officer, or other such person as aforesaid from or hinder or obstruct him in measuring the same, the person so offending shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of 5*l*.

17. That no stage carriage the top or roof of which shall be more than eight feet nine inches from the ground, or the bearing of which on the ground shall be less than four feet six inches from the centre of the track of the right or off wheel to the centre of the track of the left or near wheel, shall be allowed to carry in any case more than the number of outside passengers hereinafter respectively mentioned; (that is to say), not more than five outside passengers where such carriage shall be constructed to carry, according to the regulations of this act, not exceeding nine passengers in the whole; not more than eight outside passengers where such carriage shall be constructed to carry, according to the said regulations, in the whole exceeding nine and not exceeding twelve passengers; not more than eleven outside passengers where such carriage shall be constructed to carry, according to the said regulations, in the whole exceeding twelve and not exceeding fifteen passengers; not more than twelve outside passengers where any such carriage shall be constructed to carry, according to the said regulations, in the whole exceeding fifteen and not exceeding eighteen passengers; and not more than two additional outside passengers for every three additional passengers which any such carriage shall be constructed to carry, according to the said regulations, in the whole; and if any greater number of outside passengers shall be carried by any such stage carriage as aforesaid than is hereinbefore specified and allowed, the driver of such stage carriage, and the conductor or guard thereof, at the time when such offence shall be committed, shall respectively forfeit the sum of 5*l*.

18. That nothing in this act contained shall in any way alter or affect any of the regulations or provisions contained in the said act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, [c. 120], relating to stage carriages, now in force, which shall not be inconsistent with the regulations and provisions hereinafter contained; and that all the clauses and provisions contained in the said act relating to the recovery of penalties before any justice of the peace shall be applied and be put in force for the recovery of any penalty imposed by or incurred under this act: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for any person to inform and prosecute for any penalty incurred, as well by the owner or proprietor of any stage carriage, as by the driver, conductor, or guard thereof, under this act, so far as relates to the particulars to be painted on stage carriages, or to carrying a greater number of passengers by any stage carriage than the same is constructed to carry, or than is allowed by this act, provided the information be exhibited or the complaint made within ten days after the offence shall have been committed: Provided also, that where by this act any penalty is imposed upon the driver and conductor or guard of any stage carriage respectively for one and the same offence, only one prosecution shall be had or maintained for the recovery of such penalty against such driver or conductor or guard, at the option of the person prosecuting for the same.

19. That in any prosecution for the recovery of any penalty relating to the carrying of passengers by any stage carriage, or to the number of passengers which any stage carriage shall be constructed to carry, if proof be made of the due admeasurement of the height or bearing of such stage carriage, or of the seat or any of the seats in or upon any such carriage, or of the particulars painted thereon, the same shall be deemed and received as evidence thereof without the production of such carriage.

20. And whereas by an act passed in the 22 Geo. 3, [c. 48], intitled "An Act for charging a Duty on Persons whose Property shall be insured against Loss by Fire," it is enacted, that no person shall insure or open any office for insuring houses, furniture, goods, wares, merchandises, or other property, from loss by fire, in Great Britain, without first taking out a license for that purpose from the commissioners for managing the stamp duties, which license it is enacted shall endure and have force for one year only; and it is thereby also enacted, that every person and body politic or corporate to whom any such license shall be granted shall at the time of receiving such license give security, by bond, to his Majesty, conditioned for making out and delivering the accounts of all monies received for duties granted by the said last-mentioned act, and payment of the same, as therein mentioned: And whereas, under and by virtue of an act passed in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, [c. 28], intitled "An Act to enable Persons to make Deposits of Stock or Exchequer Bills in lieu of giving Security by Bond to the Postmaster General and Commissioners of Land Revenue, Customs, Excise, Stamps, and Taxes," and of an act passed in the 1 & 2 Vict. [c. 61], for amending the said last-mentioned act, any person from whom any security is required in respect of any matter relating to the revenues of the Post Office, land revenues, customs, excise, stamps, or taxes is enabled, in lieu of giving such security by bond, to give the same by transfer of stock or deposit of Exchequer Bills, as therein mentioned: And whereas the giving of security every year by persons insuring property from loss or damage by fire, on taking out a license for that purpose, is attended with great inconvenience, and it is expedient to provide a remedy for the same: Be it therefore enacted, That every license which shall be hereafter granted for insuring houses, furniture, goods, wares, merchandises, or other property from loss by fire, under the said act passed in the 22 Geo. 3, shall endure and remain in force from the day of the date thereof for and during all such time as the body politic or corporate to which the same shall be granted, or the persons therein named, or any of them, shall continue to insure or carry on the business of fire insurance, or, in the case of a company not incorporate, so long as the persons named in the license shall be members or partners or a member or partner of the company named or described in such license, and as and for the whole of which the same shall have been granted, anything in any of the said recited acts or in any other act contained to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided always, that every person and body politic or corporate, to whom any such license as aforesaid shall be granted, shall give security, by bond, to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, in such sum as the commissioners of stamps and taxes shall think proper, with sufficient sureties to the satisfaction of the said commissioners, or by transfer of stock or deposit of Exchequer Bills, in pursuance of the said recited acts in that behalf, for duly and faithfully keeping, making out, signing, and delivering, in the manner required by any act of parliament relating thereto, all and every the accounts by any such act required to be kept, made out, signed, and delivered by persons and bodies politic or corporate to whom license is granted for insuring houses, furniture, goods, wares, merchandises, or other property from loss by fire, and for duly and faithfully paying, as required by any such act, to the receiver general of stamps and taxes, or to such other person as the said commissioners may require, for the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, the duties which shall appear to be due on such accounts respectively, and for truly and faithfully observing and performing all the directions, matters, and things contained in the said acts on the part of such licensed person or body politic or corporate to be observed and performed; and every such security to be given under any of the said acts, whether by bond or transfer, or deposit of stock or Exchequer Bills, and in the case of any such transfer or deposit in or into whose name or names soever, together with the name of the chairman of the commissioners of stamps and taxes for the time being, the stock or Exchequer Bills shall be, or be transferred or deposited, shall continue and be a security for the due performance of all things required as aforesaid, not only during all such time as the license to which the same shall relate shall be in force, but during all such time as the body politic or corporate, or the company not incorporate named or described in such license, shall insure any such property from loss by fire, or shall carry on the business of such insurance, whether any such license shall be in force or not, or otherwise according to the conditions of any such bond, or the terms or conditions of any declaration relating to any such stock or Exchequer Bills; and such stock or Exchequer Bills may, when the security for which the same was or were transferred or deposited shall be no longer necessary, be transferred or delivered up to any of the persons who for the time being shall be a partner or member or partners or members of the company for or on whose behalf the same was or were transferred or deposited, or otherwise according to the terms, if any, in that behalf mentioned and contained in any such declaration, as the said chairman for the time being shall think proper: Provided always, that every such security shall be renewed from time to time, as often as any such bond shall become forfeited, or any of the parties thereto shall die or become bankrupt or insolvent, or reside in parts beyond the seas, and also as often as the said commissioners shall think fit, and in such amount as they or the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury shall direct, whether the same shall be by bond or transfer or deposit as aforesaid; and in the event of any neglect or refusal to renew the same when required by this act or by the said commissioners of stamps and taxes, it shall be lawful for the said last-mentioned commissioners to revoke the license which shall have been granted to the body politic or corporate, or company, or persons neglecting or refusing to renew such security to insure property from loss by fire, and thenceforth such license shall cease and determine.

21. That it shall not be lawful for the commissioners of stamps and taxes, or any of their officers, to stamp or mark any vellum, parchment, or paper upon which any bill of lading, or any charter-party, or any agreement, contract, memorandum, letter, or other writing by this act chargeable with any duty as a charter-party, shall be engrossed, written, or printed, under any pretence whatever, after the same shall be executed or signed by any party, except as herein is provided; and if any person shall make or sign any bill of lading which shall be engrossed, printed, or written, or partly engrossed or written and partly printed, upon vellum, parchment, or paper not duly stamped according to law, every such person shall forfeit the sum of 50*l*.: Provided always, that if any charter-party, or any such agreement, contract, memorandum, letter, or writing chargeable with any duty as a charter-party, shall be brought to the head office of the said commissioners, or to any of their proper officers, to be stamped, within fourteen days after the same shall bear date, and shall have been executed or signed by the party thereto who shall have first executed or signed the same, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners and they are hereby required to cause the same to be stamped, upon payment of the duty chargeable thereon, without any penalty; and if the same shall be brought to the said head office to be stamped at any time after the expiration of such fourteen days and within one calendar month after the same shall bear date, and shall have been first executed or signed as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners and they are hereby required to cause the same to be stamped upon payment of the duty chargeable thereon, and of the further sum of 10*l*. by way of penalty.

22. And whereas before any person is admitted to the degree of a barrister-at-law in England he is required to be admitted a member of one of the inns of court in England, as well as a student into the society of King's Inns in Dublin, and it is expedient to relieve all such persons from the duty payable on such admission in England; be it therefore enacted, That where any person shall be admitted a member of any of the inns of court in England, and also a student into the society of King's Inns in Dublin, and shall have paid the stamp duties chargeable on both such admissions, it shall be lawful for the commissioners of stamps and taxes to repay to such person the amount of the duty on such admission in England, after deducting the usual discount allowed on the purchase of stamps in England, provided application shall be made for that purpose within six calendar months after the last admission; and proof of both such admissions, and the payment of the duties thereon, shall be made to the satisfaction of the said commissioners, who shall be at liberty to make such regulations relating thereto as they shall think proper.

23. And whereas by the said recited act of the 55 Geo. 3, the commissioners of the treasury are authorized to allow time for making claims for a return of stamp duty paid upon probates of wills and letters of administration in cases where an executor or administrator hath paid debts out of the personal or moveable estate of any deceased person, and it is expedient to authorize the commissioners of stamps and taxes to allow time for making such claims; be it therefore enacted, That where it shall be proved by oath and proper vouchers, to the satisfaction of the said commissioners of stamps and taxes, that an executor or administrator hath paid debts due and owing from the deceased, and payable by law out of his or her personal or moveable estate, to such an amount as, being deducted from the amount or value of the estate and effects of the deceased for or in respect of which a probate or letters of administration shall have been granted in England after the 31st August, 1815, or which shall be included in any inventory duly exhibited and recorded after that day in a commissary court in Scotland, shall reduce the same to a sum which, if it had been the whole gross amount or value of such estate or effects, would have occasioned a less stamp duty to be paid on such probate or letters of administration or inventory than shall have been actually paid thereon, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners of stamps and taxes and they are hereby required to return the difference, provided the same shall be claimed within three years after the date of such probate or letters of administration, or the recording of such inventory as aforesaid; but where, by reason of any proceeding at law or in equity, the debts due from the deceased shall not have been ascertained and paid, or the effects of the deceased shall not have been recovered and made available, and in consequence thereof the executor or administrator shall be prevented from claiming such return of duty as aforesaid within the said term of three years, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners of stamps and taxes to allow such further time for making the claim as may appear to them to be reasonable under the circumstances of the case.

24. That all pecuniary penalties imposed by or which may be incurred under this act may be sued or prosecuted for and recovered by the same ways and means, and in the same manner and form, and be mitigated and applied as any other penalty incurred under any act relating to the stamp duties may be sued for, prosecuted, and recovered, mitigated and applied; and that all the powers, provisions, regulations, forfeitures, pains, and penalties contained in or imposed by any act or acts in force with relation to any of the duties under the management of the commissioners of stamps and taxes, so far as the same are or may be applicable in cases not by this act expressly provided for, and so far as the same shall not be superceded by, and as the same shall be consistent with, the express provisions of this act, shall be of full force and effect with respect to the duties by this act granted, and to the matters and things charged or chargeable therewith, in respect of which duty is hereby granted, and shall be applied and put in execution for recovering, securing, and collecting the said duties hereby granted, and for preventing, detecting, and punishing all frauds, forgeries, and other offences relating thereto, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if such powers, provisions, regulations, forfeitures, pains, and penalties had been repeated and specially enacted in this act with reference to the duties by this act granted and made payable.

25. That wherever in this act, with reference to any person, matter, or thing, any word or words is or are used importing the singular number or the masculine gender only, yet such word or words shall be understood to include several persons as well as one person, females as well as males, bodies politic or corporate as well as individuals, and several matters or things as well as one matter or thing, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

26. That this act shall commence and take effect on the respective days hereinafter mentioned, (that is to say), so much thereof as relates to the duties on passengers conveyed on railways shall commence and take effect on the 1st August, 1842; and so much thereof as relates to stage carriages, and licenses for keeping, using, or employing the same, and to the duties thereon, shall commence and take effect on the 3rd October, 1842; and so much as relates to any other duties, matters, and things, shall commence and take effect on the passing of this act.

27. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this present session of parliament.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 10, 1842.

THE 3rd section of the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26) makes it lawful for every person to devise, bequeath, or dispose of by his will, executed in manner thereafter required, "all real estate and all personal estate which he shall be entitled to, either at law or in equity, at the time of his death, and which, if not so devised, bequeathed, or disposed of, would devolve upon the heir-at-law, or customary heir of him, or, if he became entitled by descent, of his ancestor, or upon his executor or administrator;" and provides, that the power thereby given shall extend to all real estate &c., and also to all contingent, executory, or other future interest in any real or personal estate, whether the testator may or may not be ascertained as the person, or one of the persons in whom the same respectively may become vested, and whether he may be entitled thereto under the instrument by which the same respectively were created, or under any disposition thereof by deed or will; and also to such of the same estates, interests, and rights respectively, notwithstanding that he may become entitled to the same subsequently to the execution of his will."

On this the learned writer* of an able work observes, that though the Act "confers on every person the power to devise or dispose of such interests and rights, yet it is apprehended, that, in order to pass such interests, the testamentary power must be exercised, either expressly by distinct clauses, or by a special residuary devise and bequest; and that it is not safe to rely merely on a general devise of real or personal estate."

In order to ascertain whether there is good ground for this suggestion, it is necessary to advert also to the first or explanatory clause of the Act, which enacts, that the words real estate shall extend to manors, ad-rowsons, messuages, lands, tithes, rents, and hereditaments, &c., and to any estate, right, or interest, other than a chattel interest therein; and the words personal estate shall extend to leasehold estates and other chattels real, and also to monies, shares of government and other funds, securities for money, (not being real estates), debts, choses in action, rights, credits, goods, and all other property whatsoever which by law devolves upon the executor or administrator, and to any share therein."

The question raised by the learned writer whose observation we have cited, is not whether a testator being at the date of his will, or becoming after that date, but before his death, entitled to a contingent interest, may by his will pass that interest, but whether such interest would pass under a general devise of all his real or personal estate. The question will therefore be, what, under the 1 Vict. c. 26, is the true meaning and extent of those general words, in the absence of others expressly or by implication excluding the gift of any contingent interest.

The 1st section of the Act gives the widest possible meaning to the words "real estate" and "personal estate," the former words embracing in terms "any estate, right, or interest" in lands. It seems difficult to find any reason for saying that such words do not extend to a contingent interest; which is clearly some interest, if it be not actually an estate or a right. When therefore a testator says, "I give all my real estate," without more; and the Act says, that the words "real estate" shall mean any interest in lands; on what ground can it be contended that the will is to be read as if the testator had said: I give all my real estate other than any contingent interest?

The Legislature has clearly evinced the utmost anxiety to give to testators the power of devising contingent interests of every kind—interests which cannot properly be called the testator's interest until the contingency happens, as well as those which are, even while contingent, properly the testator's. It has also given to general words, for the purposes of the Act, a construction capable of embracing, and we submit, positively and necessarily embracing, in the absence of any contradictory expressions, every kind of contingency. We contend, therefore, that when a testator uses words to which, when uncontrolled by others, the Act has annexed a particular effect; when, to give them that effect, is to infer that he has exercised a power which the Legislature has been studiously anxious to give him; and when, on the other hand, to give to his general words a more restricted sense, would be to infer, against the apparent general intent of the Act, and without express declaration of intention on the part of the testator, that he has not elected to exercise the powers given to him by the Act; and further, to make him intestate, against the general rule of law, which presumes an intention to be testate wherever the words will, without violence, admit such a construction; we say, that viewing these considerations, we contend, that, as regards the passing of contingent interests, there is no substantial ground for the caution deemed requisite by the learned writer to whom we have referred; and that, generally speaking, a devise of all the testator's real estate would pass his contingent interests in realty. Of course, however, we do not dispute the prudence, particularly if the dispositions of a will are at all intricate, of devising contingent interests, ex abundanti cautela, by a special clause.

Next, let us consider the question with reference to personal estate: on this point, the language of the Act is still stronger. The words "personal estate" are declared to mean not merely, inter alia, choses in action, rights and credits; but, as if the word rights were not sufficient, the clause goes on to include "all other property whatsoever which by law devolves on the executor or administrator." Whatever doubt there may be whether contingent interests fall within the meaning of the word rights, there can be none that they are a property which would devolve on the personal representatives. And being clearly therefore included in the general meaning of the words personal estate under the Act, the same reasons which we have offered for contending that a general devise of real estate will pass contingent interests in realty, apply as fully in support of the opinion, that a general bequest of all my personal estate would pass any contingent interest in personality, provided they are such as would, if not bequeathed, vest in the personal representative.

The learned writer, whose suggestion we have been discussing, has not advanced any arguments in support of the view which he takes. From his expression that "the testamentary power must be exercised," it may be thought, that, with reference to realty at least, he considers the power given by the Act as something in the nature of an ordinary power of appointing by will, and therefore subject to the rules affecting such powers; but if that be the argument, we would submit, that the power given by the Act is of a very distinct nature from any ordinary testamentary power given by deed or will, and is of much greater force and extent. It is not a power of disposition given to a person who would otherwise be personally incapable of making a testamentary disposition; as, for instance, in the case of a feme covert; nor, as in many other cases, a power of disposition given to a person over property, over which, as owner, all interest would terminate with his life or other limited interest; but it is a power of disposition given to testators generally in respect of property, which would vest either in them or in their representatives by way of ownership, and over which, before the Act, the incapacity to give by will, was neither personal nor in consequence of the cessation of interest, but existed simply because the law limited the grasp of every testamentary instrument. The rules therefore which apply to an ordinary testamentary power, requiring the by reference to the particular subject of the power, or otherwise, an intention shall appear to execute the power as such, and not merely to make a will, do not appear to have any application to a testamentary disposition under the statute. But even if they did apply it would clearly be begging the whole question, to say that a general devise of real or personal estate does not evince an intention to execute the power of devising contingent interests, since the question is, as we have already, we think, shown, whether the use of words which, under the special explanatory clause of the Act embrace contingent interests, does or does not evince an intention to devise those interests.

Reviews.

Practice of the Court of Chancery. By S. ATKINSON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

[London: Sweet, and Stevens & Norton.]

An author who undertakes the compilation of a book of practice, and who brings to the task a reasonable share of professional knowledge and industry, can hardly fail to produce a useful work, even although the field be apparently already overfilled. The reason is, that besides all that vast amount of matter which is capable of being brought into a systematic arrangement, and referred to principles, practice consists of such an infinite number of unconnected items of knowledge, that no book written upon it is ever found to contain all that the practitioner requires to aid him. It is therefore useful to possess all the respectable books of practice that are put forth, as chance or the peculiar mental disposition of each writer is generally found to draw his attention to the elucidation of some points that have escaped the notice of his predecessors.

We have examined Mr. Atkinson's work, keeping in mind that the profession already possesses three works of established, and, according to their different plans, of deserved reputation; besides a considerable number of other works more or less falling under the class of books of practice. The little work before us cannot of course contain any new matter on the state of the practice antecedent to the Orders of August, 1841; but the different rules are stated with a very great degree of distinctness and precision. The alterations effected by the late orders are also stated, and the decisions upon them collected with care. Of the arrangement of the author we hardly know how to express ourselves; the principle on which it is formed we are wholly unable to discover; and that which, from the well-known reputation of the author, we should have been led to expect, viz. a scientific classification, does not appear to have been attempted. It possesses, however, one property, with which it has no doubt been designedly impressed, viz. very great facility of reference. The whole book is split into little chapters, and these again into little sections, each headed with the technical and well-known designation of its subject-matter. The consequence is, that the reader can find with scarcely any effort the point on which he wants information. We may add, that, so far as we have been enabled to examine Mr. Atkinson's work, we have found it accurate in its statements of the practice; and we may safely describe it as fit to be classed in the list of useful practical works.

A General Precedent for Wills, with Notes. By G. WORTHINGTON, Esq., 4th edit.

[London, 1842: Sweet, Maxwell & Son, and Stevens & Norton.]

It seems scarcely necessary to inquire, whether a work on any branch of the law, which has reached a fourth edition, has merit. As professional works are not in general the subject of any factitious admiration dependent on an excited fancy, and are not read or consulted to any extent, unless experience has proved them to be useful, the mere fact of three editions of a book having been exhausted, is sufficient to shew that it must possess considerable merit. In seeking to form an opinion, therefore, on this new edition of a work already well known*, our task is of very limited extent. We have merely to inquire whether the late authorities are diligently collected and clearly stated, and whether the effect of the late statute, (1 Vict. c. 26), where it has not been settled by decision, is learnedly and usefully discussed. And speaking generally, we think we may say that these inquiries may be answered in the affirmative. The notes to the different portions of the precedent are very full, and will ably guide the draftsman in considering the effect of the clauses as they are worded in the precedent, and of any variations that he may introduce in the forms used by him. They amount in fact to an able and condensed little treatise on the law of wills.

* For the benefit of those of our readers who may not have already met with Mr. Worthington's book, we may state, that the plan of it is to give, not one or more precedents of specific wills, adapted to carry into effect a particular series of testamentary directions, but to give in separate clauses, each explained and illustrated by notes, all those various dispositions of property which are to be found differently combined in a multitude of wills, so as to form a sort of universal precedent, comprising in itself all the testamentary dispositions of which property is capable. Whether this is a more useful form of precedent than that which is adopted in other collections of precedents, we will not take upon ourselves to say. We incline to think it very convenient for the draftsman of some experience; but perhaps for the beginner there might be some danger in relying on unconnected precedents of clauses, the force of which, taken separately, may be very different from that which they would have when joined with and controlled by other clauses.

writs de lunatico inquirendo; be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to appoint two fit and proper persons, being respectively serjeants or barristers at law of not less than ten years' standing at the bar, to be called "the commissioners in lunacy," and that in future all commissions in the nature of writs de lunatico inquirendo shall be directed or addressed to such commissioners, or one of them; and that such commissioners shall hold their offices during good behaviour, and shall, jointly and severally, have, perform, and execute all the powers, duties, and authorities now had, performed, and executed by commissioners named in commissions in the nature of writs de lunatico inquirendo.

2. That every commissioner to be appointed by virtue of this act shall, before he shall be capable of acting in the execution of any of the powers and authorities given by this act, take the following oath; (that is to say),

"I — do swear, that I will faithfully, impartially, and honestly, according to the best of my skill and knowledge, execute the several powers and trusts reposed in me as one of the commissioners in lunacy, and that without favour or affection, prejudice or malice. So help me God."

And that such oath shall be taken before the Lord Chancellor, in like manner as the usual oaths are administered before the Lord Chancellor to Masters in Ordinary of the said Court of Chancery.

3. That it shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to order and direct that any of the inquiries and matters connected with the persons and estates of lunatics, usually referred to the Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, shall be referred to such commissioners, or one of them; and such commissioners shall, jointly or severally, have, perform, and execute all the powers, duties, and authorities relating to the said inquiries and matters so to be referred to them as aforesaid, now had, performed, and executed by the Masters in Ordinary of the said Court of Chancery, and such other duties for the security and advantage of lunatics and their estates as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time order and direct.

4. That the said commissioners shall, by virtue of their appointments to be such commissioners as aforesaid, be and become visitors for superintending, inspecting, and reporting upon, under the order and direction of the Lord Chancellor, the care and treatment of all persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind by inquisition, jointly with the three visitors appointed under the authority of an act passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, [c. 36], and intituled "An Act to diminish the Inconvenience and Expense of Commissions in the Nature of Writs de Lunatico Inquirendo; and to provide for the better Care and Treatment of Idiots, Lunatics, and persons of unsound Mind found such by Inquisition," and shall severally have, perform, and execute the like powers, duties, and authorities as are had, performed, and executed by the one of the said visitors being a barrister.

5. That the commissioners to be appointed by virtue of this act shall execute commissions in the nature of writs de lunatico inquirendo, and shall conduct inquiries connected with lunatics or their estates, and shall perform all other duties to be committed to them by virtue of this act, either separately or together, and at such places, and within such times, and in such manner, as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time order and direct: Provided always, and it is hereby declared, that nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or taken to prevent the Lord Chancellor from issuing any commission in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo, addressed to any fit and proper person or persons, in addition to such commissioners so to be appointed as aforesaid, if he shall, upon any occasion, deem it proper to do so.

6. That upon the death, resignation, or removal from office of any such commissioner as aforesaid to be appointed under the authority of this act, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to appoint a fit and proper person, qualified as aforesaid, to supply such vacancy.

7. That it shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to make such orders as to him shall seem fit and proper for regulating the form and mode of proceeding before and by the said commissioners, and the practice in matters in lunacy: provided always, that a copy of such orders shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fourteen days after the same are made, if parliament be then sitting, or if not, within fourteen days after the commencement of the next session of parliament.

8. That it shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to make such order or orders as he shall deem fit for regulating and fixing the number of jurymen who shall be sworn to try inquests on commissions in the nature of writs de lunatico inquirendo: provided that every inquisition on such commissions shall be found by the oaths of twelve men.

9. That from and after the passing of this act such officers, clerks, and messengers in the office of the said commissioners, as the Lord Chancellor and the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury shall determine to be necessary and proper, shall and may be from time to time appointed.

10. And whereas by an act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, [c. 111], intituled "An Act to abolish certain Sinecure Offices connected with the Court of Chancery, and to make Provision for the Lord High Chancellor on his Retirement from Office," it was enacted, that (amongst other offices) the office of the clerk of the custodies of lunatics and idiots should cease and determine after the 20th August, 1833; provided that nothing in that act contained should be construed to determine any of the aforesaid offices then held in possession or reversion by any person appointed thereto on or before the 1st June, 1832, until the decease or resignation of such person: and whereas the present clerk of the custodies of idiots and lunatics held the said office in possession before the said 1st June, 1832: and whereas by an act passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, [c. 84], intituled "An Act to provide for the Performance of the Duties of certain Offices connected with the Court of Chancery which have been abolished," it was enacted, that from and after the death, resignation, or removal of the person then holding the office of clerk of the custodies of idiots and lunatics, the duties of such office should be performed by the secretary of lunatics, in addition to such other duties as such secretary should be required to perform; and that the fees and emoluments of the said office of clerk of the custodies should be accounted for and paid into the revenue of her Majesty's Exchequer, to be carried to and made part of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; And whereas the said office of clerk of the custodies of idiots and lunatics is productive of unnecessary expense to the estates of idiots, lunatics, and persons of unsound mind, found such by inquisition, and it is fit and desirable that such office and the fees thereof should be abolished as soon as can be: be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to order and direct, as soon as he may find it practicable so to do, having regard to the state of the funds hereinafter mentioned, that the said office of clerk of the custodies of idiots and lunatics and the fees thereof shall cease and determine, and that the said commissioners or the secretary of lunatics shall thenceforth do and perform any of such acts, deeds, matters, and things as have heretofore been done and performed in execution of the duties of the said office of clerk of the custodies, and all such acts to be done by the said commissioners and the secretary of lunatics shall in all respects have the same force and effect as if the same had been done by the clerk of the custodies or his deputy; and that all the records, proceedings, books, papers, and documents in the said office of clerk of the custodies shall thereupon be by him delivered to such person or persons as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order appoint; and that so much of the said last-recited act as enacts that there shall be paid out of the said consolidated fund to the secretary of lunatics, for expenses attending the office of clerk of the custodies of idiots and lunatics, the yearly sum of 200*l.*, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

11. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to order such fees to be received and taken by the clerks to the commissioners to be appointed under this act, and also such fees to be received and taken by the secretary of lunatics, as the Lord Chancellor shall in either case judge reasonable and proper; and that the said clerks to the commissioners and the secretary of lunatics shall and may thereafter take and receive such fees respectively, and shall pay into the Bank of England, at such times, and in such manner, and under such regulations, as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time order and direct, all fees or sums of money so received by them, and that the several sums, when so paid in, shall be placed to the credit of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery, to the account intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account."

12. And whereas by an act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, [c. 122], intituled "An Act for making further Provision for the Lord High Chancellor of England in lieu of Fees heretofore received by him," it is enacted (amongst other things), that the fees and emoluments accruing due and payable as therein mentioned for business done in the offices of the clerk of the crown, the clerk of the letters patent, the secretary of fines, and the pursebearer to the Lord Chancellor for the time being, shall be paid into the Bank of England, in the name of the Accountant-General of the said court, to an account to be intituled "An account of fees formerly payable to the Lord Chancellor;" be it enacted, That all such fees and emoluments now due, and henceforth to accrue due and payable, as in the said last-mentioned act mentioned, when paid into the Bank of England in the name of the Accountant-General of the said court, shall be placed to the account of "The Sutors Fee Fund Account," instead of the said account intituled "An account of fees formerly payable to the Lord Chancellor," and be applied as part of the fund standing to the credit of the said account intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account."

13. That out of the said fund standing to the credit of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account," there shall be paid (but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and sums of money which by any act or acts now in force are authorized to be paid thereout) by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by virtue of any order or orders of the Court of Chancery to be from time to time made for that purpose, to each of the commissioners for the time being to be appointed under this act, the yearly sum or salary of 2000*l.*, such yearly sums or salaries to be payable free from all taxes, deductions, and abatements whatsoever out of the same or any part thereof, and to be paid by equal quarterly payments on the 3rd Day of February, the 3rd day of May, the 3rd day of August, and the 3rd day of November in every year; the first of such payments, or proportionate parts thereof, to be computed from the time of their respective appointments, to be made on such of the same days of payment as shall first happen after the dates of such appointments.

14. That the officers, clerks, and messengers who shall be appointed as hereinbefore directed, and the secretary of lunatics and his clerks, shall receive by way of salary for the performance of their several duties such annual sums as the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall from time to time fix and determine; and that the same and such allowances to the said commissioners for their travelling and other expenses, and to the said commissioners and the secretary of lunatics for providing offices, and for the other expenses incident to the discharge of the duties of their respective offices as the Lord Chancellor shall think reasonable, and shall from time to time order and direct, shall be paid and payable at such times and in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall direct, under an order of the Court of Chancery, out of the said fund intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account."

15. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order or orders to be made from time to time on a petition presented to him for that purpose, to order (if he shall so think fit) an annuity or clear yearly sum of money, not exceeding 1200*l.*, to be paid out of the said account intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account," (but subject as aforesaid), to any person or persons executing the said office of a commissioner in lunacy, if and when such person or persons shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, and shall be desirous of resigning the same; and the annuity or yearly sum mentioned in such order or orders shall be paid by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England out of the said fund intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account," (but subject as aforesaid), by equal quarterly payments, on the 3rd day of February, the 3rd day of May, the 3rd day of August, and the 3rd day of November in every year, to such person or persons, from the period when he or they shall resign his said office, for the term of his life, free from taxes, or proportionate part of the first quarterly payment of such annuity or yearly sum, calculated from the day of the resignation of such person or persons, to be made on the quarterly day of payment which shall first happen after the day of such resignation as aforesaid.

16. That it shall be lawful for any officer or person whose office or appointment may be abolished or affected by virtue of this act, and who may not be appointed to any office under this act, to make a claim for compensation, within six months after the passing of this act, to the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, who shall proceed, in such manner as they may think proper, to inquire whether any compensation ought to be made to any such claimant, and if any, what were the lawful fees and emoluments in respect of which the same should be allowed; and in every case in which such claim shall be established to the satisfaction of the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, they are hereby authorized and empowered to fix and determine, by an order under their hands, the amount of the annual compensation which shall seem to them to be just and reasonable for the loss sustained by such claimant, not being in any case, where his office is wholly abolished by this act, less than three-fourth parts of the full net annual value of the lawful fees and emoluments of the office so abolished; and the amount of the net annual value of the emoluments of such office shall be ascertained and fixed by the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury according to such an average of yearly receipts and disbursements prior to the passing of this act as they shall think proper; and the times when such annual compensations shall commence and also be payable (whether quarterly or otherwise) shall also be fixed by the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury; and all the compensations fixed and determined as aforesaid shall be issued and paid and payable by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by virtue of an order or orders for that purpose to be made by the said Court of Chancery, out of the said account intitled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account," (but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and sums of money which by any act or acts now in force are authorized to be paid thereout): provided nevertheless, that an account of all such compensations shall, within fourteen days next after the same shall be so granted, be laid upon the table of the House of Commons, if parliament shall be then assembled, or if parliament shall not be then assembled, then within fourteen days after the meeting of parliament then next following.

17. That in the construction of this act the words "Lord Chancellor" shall be taken to mean and include also the Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, or other the person or persons for the time being intrusted by virtue of the Queen's sign manual with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind: and that all powers hereby given to or vested in the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury by this act may be executed by any three of such commissioners for the time being.

18. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of parliament.

CAP. LXXXV.

An Act to amend the Law relative to legal Proceedings by certain Joint-Stock Banking Companies against their own Members, and by such Members against the Companies.

[5th August, 1842.]

Whereas an act was passed in the 1 & 2 Vict., [c. 96], intituled "An Act to amend the Law relative to legal Proceedings by certain Joint-Stock Banking Companies against their own Members, and by such Members against the Companies;" And whereas the said act, by two acts severally passed in 2 & 3 Vict., [c. 68], and in the 3 & 4 Vict., [c. 111], has been continued until the 31st August, 1842, and by the last-mentioned act the provisions of the first-recited act were extended: And whereas it is expedient that the first-recited act, as extended by the last-mentioned act, should be made perpetual; be it enacted, &c., That the first-recited act, as extended by the said act of the 1 & 2 Vict., [c. 96], shall be perpetual.

2. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this present session of parliament.

CAP. LXXXVI.

An Act for abolishing certain Offices on the Revenue Side of the Court of Exchequer in England, and for regulating the Office of her Majesty's Remembrancer in that Court.

[5th August, 1842.]

Whereas by an act passed in the last session of parliament, [5 Vict. c. 5], intituled "An Act to make further Provisions for the Administration of Justice," the jurisdiction of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer as a court of equity was transferred to the Court of Chancery, and provision is by the said act made for compensating the secondaries, sworn clerks, side clerks, and other persons, in the Office of her Majesty's Remembrancer, in respect of their fees and emoluments of the equity business of the said Court of Exchequer; and by the same act three of the said sworn clerks and two of the said side clerks were appointed to offices in the Court of Chancery, and they are now severally in the exercise of the functions of the same offices respectively: And whereas provision has been made by statutes now in force for compensating most of the said officers in respect of the other fees and emoluments of their said offices in the Exchequer, the duties of which may be more conveniently performed by her Majesty's Remembrancer; and it is therefore expedient to abolish the offices hereinafter mentioned, and to provide for the performance of the duties of such offices: Be it therefore enacted, &c., That from and after the 1st day of January, 1843, the several offices or employments of first and second secondaries, of sworn and side clerks, of register and of bagbearer, in the Office of her Majesty's Remembrancer in the said court, shall be and the same are hereby abolished, and shall wholly cease and determine: Provided always, that this act shall not abridge, lessen, or in anywise affect the right or privilege heretofore enjoyed or held by the said sworn and side clerks to practise as attorneys on the revenue side of the Court of Exchequer, in the same manner as other attorneys practise therein.

2. That from and after the said offices are abolished, all process and other proceedings, acts, matters, and things, usually issued, done, had, received, filed, recorded, or taken by the first and second secondaries, and sworn and side clerks, and register of the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, which shall be by law required or needful to be issued, done, had, received, filed, recorded, or taken, shall and may be issued, done, had, received, filed, recorded, and taken by her Majesty's Remembrancer in the said Court of Exchequer, as fully and effectually, to all intents, constructions, and purposes, as the same might or could have been issued, done, had, received, filed, recorded, or taken by the said first and second secondaries, and sworn and side clerks, and register, before the passing of this act, subject nevertheless to all such orders and directions as shall or may be made from time to time by the Lord Chief Baron and other Barons of the court, for regulating the proceedings and practice of the Remembrancer's Office; and all records, books, papers, and documents, of and concerning the duties and business of the several offices hereby abolished, shall, on or before the said 1st day of January, 1843, be delivered by the said officers respectively into the custody of her Majesty's Remembrancer, to be by him kept and preserved.

3. That the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being, or any three or more of them, shall be and they are hereby authorized and empowered by their warrant to regulate the establishment of the office of her Majesty's Remembrancer; and the said commissioners shall and they are hereby empowered to fix the salaries of the Remembrancer, and of his clerks and other persons whom it may be necessary to employ in the said office.

4. That the Chief Baron and other Barons of the Court of Exchequer shall, and they are hereby required, before the 1st day of January, 1843, to settle and establish a table of the fees which in their judgment are proper to be demanded and taken in the said office of her Majesty's Remembrancer, and such table of fees shall be recorded in the Remembrancer's Office, and shall be deemed to be the lawful fees to be thenceforth demanded and taken in the Office of her Majesty's Remembrancer; and it shall be lawful for the Chief Baron and other Barons of the Court of Exchequer to add to, reduce, alter, or amend the said table of fees whenever they may deem it necessary and proper so to do; and the fees so revised and altered shall in like manner be deemed and taken to be the lawful fees of the Office of her Majesty's Remembrancer: Provided always, that no such fees shall be charged or be payable for any of the business transacted in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office for and on behalf of the crown relating to any of the public departments of revenue or otherwise, except in cases where parties are required by law to pay the costs incurred by the crown upon any proceedings taken against them.

5. That her Majesty's said Remembrancer shall cause all fees received in his office, and all disbursements made thereout for salaries and other necessary expenses, to be duly entered in a book to be kept for that purpose, distinguishing the fees received under their several heads, and the particulars and amount of every disbursement, and shall render a true and faithful account thereof to the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, in such form and with such particulars, and at such times, as the said commissioners shall think fit to require and direct.

6. That it shall be lawful for any officer or other person who may suffer loss through the operation or effect of this act, within six calendar months from the passing of the same, to make a claim for compensation to the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury for the time being, and the said commissioners shall investigate such claim by such means and in such manner as they may think necessary; and if such claim shall be established to the satisfaction of the said commissioners, they or any three of them are hereby authorized and empowered to award to the claimant, by warrant under their hands, such compensation as they shall, under all the circumstances of the case, think him entitled to, either by a gross sum or by way of annuity; and such compensation shall be issued and paid and payable out of and be charged and chargeable upon the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland: Provided always, that a copy of every such award for compensation shall be laid before the Commons House of Parliament within fourteen days next after the date thereof, if parliament shall be then assembled, and if parliament shall not be assembled, then within fourteen days after the meeting of parliament then next following.

7. That all persons admitted or admissible to practise as attorneys in the courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer of Pleas, shall be admissible in like manner as attorneys of the Court of Exchequer on the revenue side, and be allowed to practise there as such accordingly; and that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chief Baron and other barons of the said court, and they are hereby required, by rule of court, to settle the amount of fees to be taken and received by attorneys practising on the revenue side of the said court for the duties and services to be performed by them, and which fees, so settled, shall be allowed on the taxation of costs.

8. And whereas there is often inconvenient delay and great expense incurred in recovering debts to the crown, more particularly with respect to extents, by reason of the interval between the terms; be it enacted, That all or any commissions, extents, writs, or other process of whatever denomination to be hereafter issued from the office of her Majesty's Remembrancer, in pursuance of this or any former or other act or acts, or according to the ancient usage or practice of the Court of Exchequer, may bear teste and be made returnable and be returned on any day certain in term or vacation to be named in such commission, extent, writ, or other process, and thereupon, and at the return of any such commission, extent, writ, or other process, the like rules may be given, and such other proceedings had, and such subsequent writs and process issued, at any time in vacation, as may be given, had, or issued in term, or at or before the seal day after term; and all such commissions, extents, writs, or other process, rules, and proceedings, shall be as valid and effectual as if the same had been tested and made returnable, or given, or had, or issued in term, according to the common law and course of the Exchequer: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to alter the time for filing any pleadings, or to authorise the entering up any judgment in vacation; and that where any person shall enter a claim to any goods seized under any extent, or returned as forfeited, (which it shall be lawful to do in vacation), the further proceedings shall be only according to the ordinary practice and course of the court.

9. That all such orders relating to revenue causes and matters of revenue as have heretofore been made at the sittings of the Court of Exchequer appointed and held after term may be made at any time by any single judge out of court.

10. That nothing herein contained shall extend to prejudice or in anywise affect the power, jurisdiction, or authority of the Lord Chief Baron and the other barons of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer, or the ancient rights or privileges of her Majesty's Remembrancer in the said court, or the rights or privileges of any person appointed to be solicitor or attorney on behalf of her Majesty under the orders and directions of the commissioners of the treasury, customs, excise, or stamps, or under the orders and directions of any commissioners or other persons or person having the management of any other branch of her Majesty's revenue, save so far as the same may have been varied or altered by any act or acts now in force.

11. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed during the present session of parliament.

(To be continued.)

Vice-Chancellor of England's Court	TENISON EDWARDS, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.	Court of Review	F. FISHER, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.
Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce's Court	W. W. COOPER, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.
Vice-Chancellor Wigram's Court	E. J. BAVIN, Esq. of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 17, 1842.

We have been always in the habit of considering, that, if there was one doctrine of the Law of Patents more firmly established than any other, it was this, that a patent cannot be granted for a principle; and that to affect, in the specification of a patent, to claim the principle of the invention, is in the highest degree improper and dangerous. But in the volume lately published of Mr. Jarman's *Conveyancing Precedents, which comprises an elaborate and very valuable Essay on the Law of Patents, we find this doctrine controverted. The learned editor, after citing on the question, what is the proper subject of a patent, the material parts of the opinions delivered by the Judges in the great case of Boulton v. Bull, (2 H. Black. 463), and a variety of other cases down to Minter v. Wells, (1 C., M. & R. 506); Jupe v. Pratt, (Webs. Pat. Cas. 144); and Neilson v. Harford, (8 Mee. & W. 806), observes upon them thus:—

"Understanding the word principle, as applied to a patent, to mean a principle of operation or construction, or, in other words, a rule shewing the conditions essential to the attainment of a given end in manufactures, it may be safely laid down, that a patent may be supported for a principle to the extent to which it has been clearly apprehended by the inventor himself; but whether in effect a patentee secures the whole of the principle of his invention or not, will depend chiefly upon the terms of his specification; and not only is it no objection to a patent that it is for a principle as defined above, but it may be further asserted, that no patent can be successful, unless it does involve a principle of some kind, whether known to the patentee or not. For the essential characteristics of a good subject-matter are its novelty and utility; and its superior utility to known manufactures can only be explained by stating the reason, rationale, or principle of the difference: in short, the differentia of the logicians." (p. 498). And in another part of the same essay, (p. 555), the learned editor, although cautioning the draftsman, while he endeavours to embrace de facto the principle of the invention, to avoid the use of the word "principle," still, in a note, suffers his affection for the idea of claiming a principle to reappear, by referring to the case of Russell v. Cowley, (1 C., M. & R. 865), where, in the specification, he observes, that a "principle" was expressly claimed, and notwithstanding the importance of the invention, which came quickly into extensive use, the patent was never defeated †.

If in construction of law, or even in the vulgar construction, the word principle bore the limited meaning which the learned editor of the precedents assigns to it, we might perhaps find less difficulty than we do in acceding to the novel doctrine which he has put forth on the question of sustaining a patent for a principle. But we incline to think that such is not the legal or general construction of the word principle 'as applied to inventions in the text; and we contend that, at any rate, the courts have never admitted, when they have supported a patent, that it was a patent for a principle. In the case of Boulton v. Bull, the inventor had in his specification laid claim to a principle, and it is true that the patent was notwithstanding supported. But if the arguments of the learned judges be attentively considered, it will be found that they did not support the patent as a patent for a principle; nor did they justify the specification

† The passage cited from the specification of the patent in question in Russell v. Cowley was this:—"I have thus described the mode which I have employed and found fully to answer the purpose in welding tubes of iron, but I do not confine myself to the employment of this precise construction of apparatus, as several variations may be made without deviating from the principle of my invention, which is to heat the previously-prepared tubes of iron to a welding heat, &c. &c."

* Jarman's Conveyancing, 3rd edit., by G. Sweet, Esq., Vol. 7.

as claiming a principle; they held, that what the inventor called a principle, was not a principle, but a process; they used their utmost ingenuity to demonstrate that the patent was really for a substantial thing, which was inaccurately termed by the inventor a principle. In other words, they made a specification for him, and then held his patent and specification good. But throughout the whole of the arguments, not only is there not one word to shew that the Court thought a principle in any sense the subject of a patent, but the great struggle made to shew that when Mr. Watt said in terms he had invented a principle, he did not mean a principle, but meant something else, proves that the Court thought they could not admit that the patent was for a principle, without ipso facto defeating it. Lord C. J. Eyre observed, "An improper use of the word principle in the specification set forth in this case, has, I think, served to puzzle it. Undoubtedly there can be no patent for a mere principle, but for a principle so far embodied and connected with corporeal substances as to be in a condition to act and to produce effects in any art, trade, mystery, or manual operation, I think there may be a patent. Now this is the thing for which a patent here was granted, and is what the specification describes, though it miscalls it a principle." So that, according to Lord C. J. Eyre, Watt's invention was not a principle; and because it was not, the patent was by him considered valid.

Again, let us consider the dicta of Lord Lyndhurst in Minter v. Wells. In that case, the patentee claimed "the application of a self-adjusting leverage to the back and seat of a chair, whereby the weight on the seat acts as a counterbalance to the pressure against the back of such chair as above described." And Lord Lyndhurst repelled the argument that the patent purported to be for a new principle; saying that the inventor did not claim the principle, but the invention of applying that principle in a certain manner by certain machinery. His Lordship added, "It is true, that the patentee claimed the chair constructed on that principle, in whatever shape or form it might be," but still he repudiated the idea that the patent was for a principle, and only supported it because it was not for a principle, but for a certain mechanical combination embodying that principle. So in what fell from Alderson, B., in Jupe v. Pratt, we do not find any assertion that a patent may be sustained for a principle in any sense of the word; on the contrary, the learned judge expressly says you cannot have a patent for a principle alone, though you may for a principle coupled with some mode of carrying it into effect. And if you have invented both, then, he continues, you are entitled to protect yourself from all other modes of carrying the same principle into effect, that being treated by the jury as piracy of your original invention.

The sound doctrine therefore we submit to be collected from the cases is this: that a patent cannot be on the face of it for a principle; and that if an inventor were to say in the specification of his patent, "I have discovered such and such a principle, which I carry into effect by such a combination of mechanical parts, describing it, and I claim the exclusive use of that principle, however applied," such a patent and specification would be bad; but that if an invention be really of a new principle, and the patentee has also invented and set forth in his specification a given mechanical combination, by which that principle is embodied in action, he may practically secure to himself the exclusive enjoyment of the principle, by claiming the mechanical combination, not by reference to its merely material parts, but by reference to what may, perhaps, be termed its vitality, that is, its functional aptitude for embodying and carrying into effect the principle.

We admit that it may be objected to this, the generally received view of the result of the cases, that supposes something very like discrepancy between theory and the practice, and that it attributes to the Courts the apparent absurdity of saying, "You cannot have a patent for a principle eo nomine; but if you come before us in modest guise, disclaiming any right to a principle; then, if you have really invented one, we will take care indirectly to protect you in the exclusive enjoyment of it." But to this we reply, that, lawyers, we have no concern with the question whether a doctrine is absurd or not. The question is not whether the rule and the practice are or are not in perfect harmony, but what is the rule, and what is the practice; and we think we have shewn that they are as we have stated*. At the same time we may observe in defence of the distinction taken in the cases, between supporting a patent for a principle eo nomine, and for the application of a principle, that however refined and thin it may be in a logical point of view, it is not without material practical consequences. If the Court were to lay down the rule broadly, that a patent may be sustained for a principle eo nomine, where the inventor has discovered both the principle and some material mode of carrying it into effect, it would put the patentee in such a case, in the position of a party in possession, leaving it for the public to shew that he had no title. In other words, the patentee would have prima facie a right of infinite extent, leaving it to the Court to abridge it; whereas, by the contrary doctrine, the patentee comes before the Court, not with an infinite right to be cut down, but with a right, the limits of which are primarily prescribed by the Court itself.

What is the source of the discrepancy, which, if we are right, undoubtedly does exist between the technical rule and the actual practice of Courts of Law on this subject, it is perhaps not easy to ascertain. For ourselves, we should seek the solution in their anxiety to escape indirectly, in support of meritorious inventions, from a rule, which, if carried out fully in practice, would undoubtedly have most absurd and pernicious results. It is worthy of remark, that in the cases in which patents affecting to be for a principle have been sustained, the inventions have appeared by the evidence to be of high public importance; and it has been shewn that on the success or failure of the patent, depended the success or comparative extinction of extensive trading interests. We are not, indeed, aware of any case in which a great struggle has been made to construe liberally in favour of a patentee, the indiscreet claim either direct or indirect to a principle, in which the evidence has not shewn that the invention was either actually in, or rapidly coming into general use, and indispensable to the perfection, if not actually to the existence, of some important branch of manufacture.

* This view is indeed also taken by the learned editor of the Precedents himself in another part of his essay, (p. 496, note (a)), where he says, "The true rule appears to be, that there cannot be a patent for a principle or method unless it is applied to practice, so as to produce a vendible result; but the patent is for the application of the principle in any and every manner that is fairly suggested by or deducible from the specification." And we must add, that he elsewhere distinctly cautions the draftsman against claiming a principle eo nomine.

CAP. XCV.

An Act for consolidating the Four Courts Marshalsea, Dublin, Sheriffs Prison, Dublin, and City Marshalsea, Dublin, and for regulating the Four Courts Marshalsea in Ireland.

[10th August, 1842.]

CAP. XCVI.

An Act to alter the Number and Define the Boundaries of the several Baronies of the County of Dublin.

[10th August, 1842.]

CAP. XCVII.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Double Costs, Notices of Action, Limitations of Actions, and Pleas of the General Issue, under certain Acts of Parliament.

[10th August, 1842.]

Whereas divers acts of parliament, public, local, and personal, contain enactments or provisions relating to the recovery of double, treble, or other costs in certain cases, and to the pleading of the general issue and the giving any special matter in evidence at any trial to be had for any matter done in pursuance of or under the authority of the said acts, and to the giving of notice of action before any action shall be commenced: And whereas it is expedient that the law should be altered in such respects: Be it therefore enacted &c., That so much of any clause, enactment, or provision in any act or acts commonly called public local and personal, or local and personal, or in any act or acts of a local or personal nature, whereby it is enacted or provided that either double or treble costs, or any other than the usual costs between party and party, shall or may be recovered, shall be and the same are hereby repealed: Provided always, that in lieu thereof the usual costs between party and party shall and may be recovered, and no more.

2. That so much of any clause, enactment, or provision in any public act or acts, not local or personal, whereby it is enacted or provided that either double or treble costs, or any other than the usual costs between party and party, shall or may be recovered, shall be and the same are hereby repealed: Provided always, that instead of such costs the party or parties heretofore entitled under such last-mentioned acts to such double, treble, or other costs, shall receive such full and reasonable indemnity as to all costs, charges, and expenses incurred in and about any action, suit, or other legal proceeding, as shall be taxed by the proper officer in that behalf, subject to be reviewed in like manner and by the same authority as any other taxation of costs by such officer.

3. That so much of any clause or provision in any act or acts commonly called public local and personal, or local and personal, or in any act or acts of a local and personal nature, whereby any party or parties are entitled or permitted to plead the general issue only and to give any special matter in evidence without specially pleading the same, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

4. And whereas it is expedient that the law should be uniform with respect to notice of action in all cases where such notice of action is required; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this act, in all cases where notice of action is required, such notice shall be given one calendar month at least before any action shall be commenced; and such notice of action shall be sufficient, any act or acts to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

5. And whereas divers acts commonly called public local and personal, or local and personal acts, and diverse other acts of a local and personal nature, contain clauses limiting the time within which actions may be brought for anything done in pursuance of the said acts respectively: And whereas the periods of such limitations vary very much, and it is expedient that there should be one period of limitation only; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this act the period within which any action may be brought for anything done under the authority or in pursuance of any such act or acts shall be two years, or in case of continuing damage, then within one year after such damage shall have ceased; and that so much of any clause, provision, or enactment by which any other time or period of limitation is appointed or enacted shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

6. That nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to any action, bill, plaint, or information, or any legal proceeding of any kind whatsoever, commenced before the passing of this act, but such proceedings may be thereupon had and taken in all respects as if this act had not passed.

CAP. XCVIII.

An Act to amend the Laws concerning Prisons.

[10th August, 1842.]

CAP. XCIX.

An Act to prohibit the Employment of Women and Girls in Mines and Collieries, to regulate the Employment of Boys, and to make other Provisions relating to Persons working therein.

[10th August, 1842.]

CAP. C.

An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to the Copyright of Designs for ornamenting Articles of Manufacture.

[10th August, 1842.]

Whereas by the several acts mentioned in schedule (A.) to this act annexed, there was granted, in respect of the woven fabrics therein mentioned, the sole right to use any new and original pattern for printing the same during the period of three calendar months: And whereas by the act mentioned in the schedule (B.) to this act annexed, there was granted, in respect of all articles, except lace, and except the articles within the meaning of the acts heretofore referred to, the sole right of using any new and original design, for certain purposes, during the respective periods therein mentioned; but so far as the protection afforded by the said acts in respect of the application of designs to certain articles of manufacture is insufficient, it is expedient to extend the same, but upon the conditions hereinafter expressed; now, for that purpose, and for the purpose of consolidating the provisions of the said acts, be it enacted, That this act shall come into operation on the 1st September, 1842, and that thereupon all the said acts mentioned in the said schedules (A.) and (B.) to this act annexed shall be and they are hereby repealed.

2. That notwithstanding such repeal of the said acts, every copyright in force under the same shall continue in force till the expiration of such copyright; and with regard to all offences or injuries committed against any such copyright before this act shall come into operation, every penalty imposed and every remedy given by the said acts, in relation to any such offence or injury, shall be applicable as if such acts had not been repealed; but with regard to such offences or injuries committed against any such copyright after this act shall come into operation, every penalty imposed and every remedy given by this act in relation to any such offence or injury shall be applicable as if such copyright had been conferred by this act.

3. And with regard to any new and original design (except for sculpture and other things within the provisions of the several acts mentioned in the schedule (C.) to this act annexed), whether such design be applicable to the ornamenting of any article of manufacture, or of any substance, artificial or natural, or partly artificial and partly natural, and that whether such design be so applicable for the pattern, or for the shape or configuration, or for the ornament thereof, or for any two or more of such purposes, and by whatever means such design may be so applicable, whether by printing, or by painting, or by embroidery, or by weaving, or by sewing, or by modelling, or by casting, or by embossing, or by engraving, or by staining, or by any other means whatsoever, manual, mechanical, or chemical, separate or combined; be it enacted, That the proprietor of every such design, not previously published either within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or elsewhere, shall have the sole right to apply the same to any articles of manufacture, or to any such substances as aforesaid, provided the same be done within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the respective terms hereinafter mentioned, such respective terms to be computed from the time of such design being registered according to this act; (that is to say),

In respect of the application of any such design to ornamenting any article of manufacture contained in the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, eighth, or eleventh of the classes following, for the term of three years:

In respect of the application of any such design to ornamenting any article of manufacture contained in the seventh, ninth, or tenth of the classes following, for the term of nine calendar months:

In respect of the application of any such design to ornamenting any article of manufacture or substance contained in the twelfth or thirteenth of the classes following, for the term of twelve calendar months:

Class 1.—Articles of manufacture composed wholly or chiefly of any metal or mixed metals:

Class 2.—Articles of manufacture composed wholly or chiefly of wood:

Class 3.—Articles of manufacture composed wholly or chiefly of glass:

Class 4.—Articles of manufacture composed wholly or chiefly of earthenware:

Class 5.—Paper hangings:

Class 6.—Carpets:

Class 7.—Shawls, if the design be applied solely by printing, or by any other process by which colours are or may hereafter be produced upon tissue or textile fabrics:

Class 8.—Shawls not comprised in Class 7:

Class 9.—Yarn, thread, or warp, if the design be applied by printing, or by any other process by which colours are or may hereafter be produced:

Class 10.—Woven fabrics, composed of linen, cotton, wool, silk, or hair, or of any two or more of such materials, if the design be applied by printing, or by any other process by which colours are or may hereafter be produced upon tissue or textile fabrics; excepting the articles included in Class 11:

Class 11.—Woven fabrics, composed of linen, cotton, wool, silk, or hair, or of any two or more of such materials, if the design be applied by printing, or by any other process by which colours are or may hereafter be produced upon tissue or textile fabrics, such woven fabrics being or coming within the description technically called furnitures, and the repeat of the design whereof shall be more than 12 inches by 8 inches:

Class 12.—Woven fabrics, not comprised in any preceding class:

Class 13.—Lace, and any article of manufacture or substance not comprised in any preceding class.

4. That no person shall be entitled to the benefit of this act, with regard to any design in respect of the application thereof to ornamenting any article of manufacture, or any such substance, unless such design have before publication thereof been registered according to this act, and unless at the time of such registration such design have been registered in respect of the application thereof to some or one of the articles of manufacture or substances comprised in the above-mentioned classes, by specifying the number of the class in respect of which such registration is made, and unless the name of such person shall be registered according to this act as a proprietor of such design, and unless after publication of such design every such article of manufacture, or such substance to which the same shall be so applied, published by him, hath thereon, if the article of manufacture be a woven fabric for printing, at one end thereof, or, if of any other kind or such substance as aforesaid, at the end or edge thereof, or other convenient place thereon, the letters "Rd." together with such number or letter, or number and letter, and in such form as shall correspond with the date of the registration of such design according to the registry of designs in that behalf; and such marks may be put on any such article of manufacture or such substance, either by making the same in or on the material itself of which such article or such substance shall consist, or by attaching thereto a label containing such marks.

5. That the author of any such new and original design shall be considered the proprietor thereof, unless he have executed the work on behalf of another person for a good or a valuable consideration, in which case such person shall be considered the proprietor, and shall be entitled to be registered in the place of the author; and every person acquiring for a good or a valuable consideration a new and original design, or the right to apply the same to ornamenting any one or more articles of manufacture, or any one or more such substances as aforesaid, either exclusively of any other person or otherwise, and also every person upon whom the property in such design or such right to the application thereof shall devolve, shall be considered the proprietor of the design in the respect in which the same may have been so acquired, and to that extent, but not otherwise.

6. That every person purchasing or otherwise acquiring the right to the entire or partial use of any such design may enter his title in the register hereby provided, and any writing purporting to be a transfer of such design and signed by the proprietor thereof, shall operate as an effectual transfer; and the registrar shall, on request, and the production of such writing, or in the case of acquiring such right by any other mode than that of purchase on the production of any evidence to the satisfaction of the registrar, insert the name of the new proprietor in the register; and the following may be the form of such transfer, and of such request to the registrar:

Form of Transfer, and Authority to register.

I A. B., author [or proprietor] of design, No. —, having transferred my right thereto, [or, if such transfer be partial], so far as regards the ornamenting of — [describe the articles of manufacture or substances, or the locality with respect to which the right is transferred], to B. C. of — do hereby authorize you to insert his name on the register of designs accordingly.

Form of Request to register.

I B. C., the person mentioned in the above transfer, do request you to register my name and property in the said design as entitled [if to the entire use] to the entire use of such design, [or, if to the partial use], to the partial use of such design, so far as regards the application thereof, [describe the articles of manufacture, or the locality in relation to which the right is transferred.]

But if such request to register be made by any person to whom any such design shall devolve otherwise than by transfer, such request may be in the following form:

"I C. D., in whom is vested by [state Bankruptcy or otherwise] the design, No. — [or if such devolution be of a per-lial right, so far as regards the application thereof] to [describe the articles of manufacture or substance, or the locality in relation to which the right has devolved]."

7. And for preventing the piracy of registered designs, be it enacted, That during the existence of any such right to the entire or partial use of any such design no person shall either do or cause to be done any of the following acts with regard to any articles of manufacture, or substances, in respect of which the copyright of such design shall be in force, without the license or consent in writing of the registered proprietor thereof; (that is to say),

No person shall apply any such design, or any fraudulent imitation thereof for the purpose of sale, to the ornamenting of any article of manufacture, or any substance, artificial or natural, or partly artificial and partly natural:

No person shall publish, sell, or expose for sale any article of manufacture, or any substance, to which such design, or any fraudulent imitation thereof, shall have been so applied, after having received, either verbally or in writing, or otherwise from any source other than the proprietor of such design, knowledge that his consent has not been given to such application, or after having been served with or had left at his premises a written notice signed by such proprietor or his agent to the same effect.

8. That if any person commit any such act, he shall for every offence forfeit a sum not less than 5*l.* and not exceeding 30*l.* to the proprietor of the design in respect of whose right such offence has been committed; and such proprietor may recover such penalty as follows:

In England, either by an action of debt or on the case against the party offending, or by summary proceeding before two justices having jurisdiction where the party offending resides; and if such proprietor proceed by such summary proceeding, any justice of the peace acting for the county, riding, division, city, or borough where the party offending resides, and not being concerned either in the sale or manufacture of the article of manufacture, or in the design to which such summary proceeding relates, may issue a summons requiring such party to appear on a day and at a time and place to be named in such summons, such time not being less than eight days from the date thereof; and every such summons shall be served on the party offending, either in person or at his usual place of abode; and either upon the appearance or upon the default to appear of the party offending, any two or more of such justices may proceed to the hearing of the complaint, and upon proof of the offence, either by the confession of the party offending, or upon the oath or affirmation of one or more credible witnesses, which such justices are hereby authorized to administer, may convict the offender in a penalty of not less than 5*l.* or more than 30*l.*, as aforesaid, for each offence, as to such justices doth seem fit; but the aggregate amount of penalties for offences in respect of any one design committed by any one person, up to the time at which any of the proceedings herein mentioned shall be instituted, shall not exceed the sum of 100*l.*; and if the amount of such penalty or of such penalties, and the costs attending the conviction so assessed by such justices, be not forthwith paid, the amount of the penalty or of the penalties, and of the costs, together with the costs of the distress and sale, shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender, wherever the same happen to be in England; and the justices before whom the party has been convicted, or, on proof of the conviction, any two justices acting for any county, riding, division, city, or borough in England, where goods and chattels of the person offending happen to be, may grant a warrant for such distress and sale; and the overplus, if any, shall be returned to the owner of the goods and chattels, on demand; and every information and conviction which shall be respectively laid or made in such summary proceeding before two justices under this act may be drawn or made out in the following forms respectively, or to the effect thereof, mutatis mutandis, as the case may require:

Form of Information.

"Be it remembered, That on the — at — in the county of — A. B. of — in the county of — [or C. D. of — in the county of —] at the instance and on behalf of A. B. of — in the county of —] cometh before us — and — two of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the county of —, and giveth us to understand that the said A. B., before and at the time when the offence hereinafter mentioned was committed, was the proprietor of a new and original design for [here describe the design] and that within twelve calendar months last past, to wit, on the — at — in the county of — E. F. of — in the county of — did [here describe the offence], contrary to the form of the act passed in the — year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled 'An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to the Copyright of Designs for ornamenting Articles of Manufacture.'"

Form of Conviction.

"Be it remembered, That on the — day of — in the year of our Lord — at — in the county of — E. F. of — in the county aforesaid is convicted before us — and — two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county, for that he the said E. F. on the — day of — in the year — at — in the county of — did [here describe the offence] contrary to the form of the statute in that case made and provided; and we the said justices do adjudge that the said E. F. for his offence aforesaid hath forfeited the sum of — to the said A. B."

In Scotland, by action before the court of session in ordinary form, or by summary action before the sheriff of the county where the offence may be committed or the offender resides, who, upon proof of the offence or offences, either by confession of the party offending or by the oath or affirmation of one or more credible witnesses, shall convict the offender and find him liable in the penalty or penalties aforesaid, as also in expenses; and it shall be lawful for the sheriff, in pronouncing such judgment for the penalty or penalties and costs, to insert in such judgment a warrant, in the event of such penalty or penalties and costs not being paid, to levy and recover the amount of the same by pointing: Provided always, that it shall be lawful to the sheriff, in the event of his dismissing the action and absolving the defender, to find the complainer liable in expenses; and any judgment so to be pronounced by the sheriff in such summary application shall be final and conclusive, and not subject to review by advocacy, suspension, reduction, or otherwise:

In Ireland, either by action in a superior court of law at Dublin or by civil bill in the civil bill court of the county or place where the offence was committed.

9. That notwithstanding the remedies hereby given for the recovery of any such penalty as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the proprietor in respect of whose right such penalty shall have been incurred (if he shall elect to do so) to bring such action as he may be entitled to for the recovery of any damages which he shall have sustained, either by the application of any such design or of a fraudulent imitation thereof, for the purpose of sale, to any articles of manufacture or substances, or by the publication, sale, or exposure to sale, as aforesaid, by any person, of any article or substance to which such design or any fraudulent imitation thereof shall have been so applied, such person knowing that the proprietor of such design had not given his consent to such application.

10. That in any suit in equity which may be instituted by the proprietor of any design or the person lawfully entitled thereto, relative to such design, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the judge having cognizance of such suit that the design has been registered in the name of a person not being the proprietor or lawfully entitled thereto, it shall be competent for such judge, in his discretion, by a decree or order in such suit to direct either that such registration be cancelled (in which case the same shall thenceforth be wholly void), or that the name of the proprietor of such design, or other person lawfully entitled thereto, be substituted in the register for the name of such wrongful proprietor or claimant, in like manner as is hereinbefore directed in case of the transfer of a design, and to make such order respecting the costs of such cancellation or substitution, and of all proceedings to procure and effect the same, as he shall think fit; and the registrar is hereby authorized and required, upon being served with an official copy of such decree or order, and upon payment of the proper fee, to comply with the tenor of such decree or order, and either cancel such registration or substitute such new name, as the case may be.

11. That unless a design applied to ornamenting any article of manufacture or any such substance as aforesaid be so registered as aforesaid, and unless such design so registered shall have been applied to the ornamenting such article or substance within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and also after the copyright of such design in relation to such article or substance shall have expired, it shall be unlawful to put on any such article or such substance, in the manner hereinbefore required with respect to articles or substances whereunto shall be applied a registered design, the marks hereinbefore required to be so applied, or any marks corresponding therewith or similar thereto; and if any person shall so unlawfully apply any such marks, or shall publish, sell, or expose for sale any article of manufacture, or any substance with any such marks so unlawfully applied, knowing that any such marks have been unlawfully applied, he shall forfeit for every such offence a sum not exceeding 5*l.*, which may be recovered by any person proceeding for the same by any of the ways hereinbefore directed with respect to penalties for pirating any such design.

12. That no action or other proceeding for any offence or injury under this act shall be brought after the expiration of twelve calendar months from the commission of the offence; and in every such action or other proceeding the party who shall prevail shall recover his full costs of suit or of such other proceeding.

13. That in the case of any summary proceeding before any two justices in England, such justices are hereby authorized to award payment of costs to the party prevailing, and to grant a warrant for enforcing payment thereof against the summoning party, if unsuccessful, in the like manner as is hereinbefore provided for recovering any penalty with costs against any offender under this act.

14. And for the purpose of registering designs for articles of manufacture, in order to obtain the protection of this act, be it enacted, that the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for the consideration of all matters of trade and plantations, may appoint a person to be a registrar of designs for ornamenting articles of manufacture, and, if the lords of the said committee see fit, a deputy registrar, clerks, and other necessary officers and servants; and such registrar, deputy registrar, clerks, officers, and servants shall hold their offices during the pleasure of the lords of the said committee; and the commissioners of the Treasury may from time to time fix the salary or remuneration of such registrar, deputy registrar, clerks, officers, and servants; and, subject to the provisions of this act, the lords of the said committee may make rules for regulating the execution of the duties of the office of the said registrar; and such registrar shall have a seal of office.

15. That the said registrar shall not register any design in respect of any application thereof to ornamenting any articles of manufacture or substances, unless he be furnished, in respect of each such application, with two copies, drawings, or prints of such design, accompanied with the name of every person who shall claim to be proprietor, or of the style or title of the firm under which such proprietor may be trading, with his place of abode or place of carrying on his business, or other place of address, and the number of the class in respect of which such registration is made; and the registrar shall register all such copies, drawings, or prints, from time to time successively, as they are received by him for that purpose; and on every such copy, drawing or print, he shall affix a number corresponding to such succession; and he shall retain one copy, drawing, or print, which he shall file in his office, and the other he shall return to the person by whom the same has been forwarded to him; and in order to give ready access to the copies of designs so registered, he shall class such copies of designs, and keep a proper index of each class.

16. That upon every copy, drawing, or print of an original design so returned to the person registering as aforesaid, or attached thereto, and upon every copy, drawing, or print thereof received for the purpose of such registration, or of the transfer of such design being certified thereon or attached thereto, the registrar shall certify under his hand that the design has been so registered, the date of such registration, and the name of the registered proprietor or the style or title of the firm under which such proprietor may be trading, with his place of abode or place of carrying on his business, or other place of address, and also the number of such design, together with such number or letter, or number and letter, and in such form as shall be employed by him to denote or correspond with the date of such registration; and such certificate made on every such original design, or on such copy thereof, and purporting to be signed by the registrar or deputy registrar, and purporting to have the seal of office of such registrar affixed thereto, shall, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be sufficient proof, as follows,

Of the design, and of the name of the proprietor thereof mentioned, having been duly registered; and

Of the commencement of the period of registry; and

Of the person named therein as proprietor being the proprietor; and

Of the originality of the design; and

Of the provisions of this act, and of any rule under which the certificate appears to be made, having been complied with. And any such writing purporting to be such certificate shall, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be received as evidence without proof of the handwriting of the signature thereto, or of the seal of office affixed thereto, or of the person signing the same being the registrar or deputy registrar.

17. That every person shall be at liberty to inspect any design whereof the copyright shall have expired, paying only such fee as shall be appointed by virtue of this act in that behalf; but with regard to designs whereof the copyright shall not have expired, no such design shall be open to inspection, except by a proprietor of such design or by any person authorized by him in writing, or by any person specially authorized by the registrar, and then only in the presence of such registrar or in the presence of some person holding an appointment under this act, and not so as to take a copy of any such design or of any part thereof, nor without paying for every such inspection such fee as aforesaid: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said registrar to give to any person applying to him, and producing a particular design, together with the registration mark thereof, or producing such registration mark only, a certificate stating whether of such design there be any copyright existing, and if there be, in respect to what particular article of manufacture or substance such copyright exists, and the term of such copyright, and the date of registration, and also the name and address of the registered proprietor thereof.

18. That the commissioners of the treasury shall from time to time fix fees to be paid for the services to be performed by the registrar, as they shall deem requisite, to defray the expenses of the said office, and the salaries or other remuneration of the said registrar, and of any other persons employed under him, with the sanction of the commissioners of the treasury, in the execution of this act; and the balance, if any, shall be carried to the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom, and be paid accordingly into the receipt of her Majesty's Exchequer at Westminster; and the Commissioners of the Treasury may regulate the manner in which such fees are to be received, and in which they are to be kept, and in which they are to be accounted for, and they may also remit or dispense with the payment of such fees in any cases where they may think it expedient so to do; Provided always, that the fee for registering a design to be applied to any woven fabric, mentioned or comprised in classes 7, 9, or 10, shall not exceed the sum of 1*l.*; that the fee for registering a design to be applied to a paper hanging shall not exceed the sum of 10*s.*; and that the fee to be received by the registrar for giving a certificate relative to the existence or expiration of any copyright in any design printed on any woven fabric, yarn, thread, or warp, or printed, embossed, or worked on any paper hanging, to any person exhibiting a piece end of a registered pattern, with the registration mark thereon, shall not exceed the sum of 2*s.* 6*d.*

19. That if either the registrar or any person employed under him either demand or receive any gratuity or reward, whether in money or otherwise, except the salary or remuneration authorized by the commissioners of the treasury, he shall forfeit for every such offence 50*l.* to any person suing for the same by action of debt in the Court of Exchequer at Westminster; and he shall also be liable to be either suspended or dismissed from his office, and rendered incapable of holding any situation in the said office, as the Commissioners of the Treasury see fit.

20. And for the interpretation of this act, be it enacted, That the following terms and expressions, so far as they are not repugnant to the context of this act, shall be construed as follows; (that is to say), the expression "commissioners of the treasury" shall mean the lord high treasurer for the time being, or the commissioners of her Majesty's treasury for the time being, or any three or more of them; and the singular number shall include the plural as well as the singular number; and the masculine gender shall include the feminine gender as well as the masculine gender.

21. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in the present session of parliament.

CAP. CI.

An Act for extending to the Governors and Officers of the East India Company the Powers given by an Act of the Fifth Year of King George the Fourth to Her Majesty's Governors and Officers for the more effectual Suppression of the Importation of Slaves into India by Sea.

[10th August, 1842.]

CAP. CII.

An Act for the better Discovery and Prevention of Bribery and Treating at the Election of Members of Parliament.

[10th August, 1842.]

Whereas it has become notorious that extensive bribery prevails in many places in the election of members to serve in parliament, and that the laws now in force are insufficient for the discovery thereof; and it is expedient that further powers be given for that purpose, and for collecting evidence on which to found further proceedings in regard to places in which bribery shall be found to have been generally or extensively practised: be it enacted &c., That if after a committee shall have been nominated for the trial of an election petition, in which bribery shall be charged to have been committed, the petition shall be withdrawn, or the charges of bribery therein contained, or any other charge of bribery which shall have been made or stated before such committee, whether in support of any petition complaining of the return, or by way of recrimination, or in answer to any petition, shall be withdrawn, abandoned, or not bona fide prosecuted before the said committee, it shall and may be lawful for such committee in its discretion to examine into and ascertain the circumstances under which such withdrawal, abandonment, or forbearance to prosecute such charges as aforesaid shall have taken place, and whether the same has been the matter of compromise, arrangement, or understanding, covert or otherwise, in order to avoid the discovery of bribery at the said election; and the said committee shall be authorised, if it shall think fit, to state in their report upon the election petition any special matter relating to the cause and reason of the abandonment or forbearance to prosecute the said charges; and for more effectual discovery of the truth of the matters so to be inquired into, full power and authority is hereby given to such committee to examine (as witnesses subject to the ordinary rules of evidence) the sitting member or members, or candidate or candidates at the said election, and their several and respective agents, and all other persons whomsoever, touching and concerning such withdrawal, abandonment, or forbearance to prosecute such charges.

2. That if any committee nominated to try an election petition shall recommend that further inquiry and investigation should be made regarding bribery at such election, in that case the speaker shall nominate an agent to prosecute the investigation into the matter of the said bribery; and the said committee shall, within fourteen days from the time of their having made their report on the election petition, re-assemble, and shall inquire and ascertain whether bribery was or was not practised at the said election, and to what extent, and shall specially report to the House all such matters relating to the said bribery, and the parties implicated or concerned therein, as to the said committee shall seem expedient.

3. That the said committee, when so re-assembled, shall possess, and are hereby authorized to exercise, according to their discretion, all and every the powers and authorities relating to the examination of members of parliament, candidates, agents, and all other persons whomsoever, and to the production of papers and writings relating to the matter under inquiry, as were possessed or might have been exercised by the said committee upon the trial of the said election petition.

4. That every petition to the House of Commons, complaining that general or extensive bribery has prevailed at the then last or any previous election of a member or members to serve in parliament for any county, borough, or place, which shall be subscribed by some person claiming therein to have had a right to vote at the election to which the same shall relate, or to have had a right to be returned or elected thereat, or alleging himself to have been a candidate at the election, and which shall be presented after the time limited by the House for presenting election petitions, and within three calendar months next after some one or more of the acts of bribery charged therein shall have been committed, if the House be then sitting, or if such period shall expire during an adjournment of the House for the Easter or Christmas holidays, or during a prorogation of parliament, then within two days after the end of such adjournment, or within thirty days after the beginning of the next session, shall be inquired into by a committee to be appointed in all respects as a committee for trying an election petition; and for this purpose such petition shall be referred to the general committee of elections, who, in case the examiner of recognisances shall report that the recognisances in respect of such petition are sufficient, pursuant to the provisions hereinafter contained, shall give the same notices, and proceed in the same manner in appointing such committee as in appointing an election committee under an act passed in the 5 Vict. [c. 53], intitled "An Act to amend the Law for the Trial of controverted Elections;" and all the powers, clauses, and provisions in that or any other act for the time being in force for regulating the trial of controverted elections shall be taken to apply to the said committee and its proceedings, and to all petitioners, parties, witnesses, and others respectively; and the said committee shall inquire and ascertain whether bribery was or was not practised at the said election, and shall specially report to the House all such matters relating to the said bribery, and the parties implicated or concerned therein, as to the said committee shall seem expedient: provided always, that if the committee shall report that there was reasonable and probable ground for the allegations of the petition, the said committee shall have power to order that the costs of the petitioners shall be borne as in the case of a committee on any public matter ordered by the House of Commons.

5. That the said committee shall (before any other matter of the said petition) inquire whether any of the said acts of bribery charged therein had been committed within three months next before the time of presenting the said petition, and unless it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the said committee that one or more of the acts of bribery charged in the said petition had been committed within the said period of three months, the said committee shall not further proceed with the matter of the said petition.

6. That if any election petition containing a charge of bribery shall be withdrawn before a committee shall be appointed for the purpose of trying such petition, and petition complaining that general or extensive bribery has prevailed at such election, and which shall be subscribed as above provided, which shall be presented to the House at any time within twenty-one days of the withdrawal of such election petition being notified to the House, or if such period shall expire during an adjournment of the House for the Easter or Christmas holidays, or during a prorogation of parliament, then within two days after the end of such adjournment, or within fourteen days after the beginning of the next session, such petition shall, notwithstanding that three calendar months may have elapsed since any of the acts of bribery charged therein shall have been committed, be dealt with in like manner in all respects as above provided in the case of a petition presented within three calendar months next after some one or more of the acts of bribery charged therein shall have been committed.

7. That no such petition as aforesaid shall be referred as hereinbefore provided, unless some time before three of the clock in the afternoon of the seventh day after the day on which such petition shall have been presented, a recognisance or recognisances shall be entered into by two persons, each in the sum of 250*l.*, or by one person in the sum of 500*l.*, conditioned to be forfeited unless such persons shall establish and prove to the satisfaction of the committee to which the petition shall be referred that there was reasonable and probable ground for the allegations contained in such petition.

8. That the chairman of any such committee, with the authority and sanction of such committee, shall certify under his hand whether such recognisance has been forfeited; and in case the said chairman shall certify that such recognisance has been forfeited, the sum or sums mentioned in such recognisance shall be absolutely forfeited, and shall be recoverable from the party or parties who shall have entered into such recognisance by information by the Attorney-General; and upon such information being filed, and upon production of the said recognisance and certificate, with an affidavit of the signature thereto, final judgment may be signed upon such information, and execution may be forthwith issued to levy the same: Provided always, that if the handwriting of the chairman of the committee, by whom the certificate shall have been signed, be duly verified, the validity of such certificate shall not be called in question in any court upon the allegation of any matter previous to the date thereof.

9. That the said recognisances shall be entered into in the same manner, and before the same parties, and with the like affidavit of sufficiency, as the recognisances of sureties in the case of election petitions.

10. That upon any such recognisances being entered into before the examiner of recognisances, or received by him, with the affidavit thereunto annexed, he shall forthwith report the same to the Speaker; and upon receipt of any such report, the Speaker shall communicate the same to the House, and shall also cause notice thereof to be immediately sent by the post to the returning officer for the place for which the election to which such petition shall relate was held; and such returning officer shall cause a true copy of such notice to be affixed on or near the door of the town-hall or of the parish church of or nearest to the place for which such election was held; and such notice shall also be inserted, by order of the Speaker, in one of the next two London Gazettes.

11. That it shall be lawful for any person who shall have been a candidate at the election to which such petition shall relate, and for any person complained of in such petition, and for any person having for the time being a right to vote for a member to serve in parliament for the place to which such petition shall relate, or having in fact voted at the election to which such petition shall relate, to object to the parties or either of them who shall have entered into any such recognisance, on the same grounds as those on which sureties entering into recognisances in the case of election petitions may be objected to; provided, that the ground of objection shall be stated in writing under the hand of the objecting party, or his or their agent, and shall be delivered to the examiner of recognisances within ten days after the day of the date of the Gazette in which such notice as aforesaid shall be inserted, if the party objected to reside in England, or within fourteen days after such date if the party objected reside in Scotland or Ireland.

12. That for the purpose of ascertaining and reporting upon the sufficiency of the parties who shall have entered into any such recognisance, such recognisance shall be dealt with in all respects as recognisances entered into by sureties in the case of election petitions; and all the provisions of the said act of the 5 Vict., or of any other act for the time being in force for regulating the trial of controverted elections, which relate to the mode of taking objections to sureties and to the proceedings consequential thereon, shall be applicable and in force with regard to the recognisances required to be entered into under the provisions of this act.

13. That no committee who shall re-assemble under the provisions hereinbefore contained, nor any committee appointed to investigate the matter of any petition which may be presented after the time limited for presenting election petition as herein also provided, shall possess any power or authority to determine or in any way affect the seat or return of any member or members of the House of Commons, or the issuing or restraining the issue of any writ for the election of a member or members of parliament.

14. That upon the prosecution of any inquiry under the authority of this act by an agent appointed by the speaker herein is provided, every such agent is hereby authorized from time to time to certify under his hand to the Commissioners her Majesty's Treasury what sum and sums of money is or are required to meet the necessary expenses for effectually prosecuting any such inquiry, including the sums proper and necessary to be paid to and for the witnesses who may be required to attend the inquiry to which such certificate may relate; and the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall be authorized to advance to the said agent from time to time such sums as shall be needed for the purpose aforesaid, which sum or so much thereof as shall be levied under any order for the payment of costs as hereinafter provided, shall be reimbursed to the said Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

15. That it shall and may be lawful for any committee re-assembled as aforesaid, and for every committee appointed under the authority of this act, in their discretion, to report order, and direct that the costs, charges, and expenses incurred and occasioned in and about the inquiries respectively prosecuted before any such committee, or any part or proportion thereof, shall be paid by any party, person or persons, who may have been proved before the said committee, being first duly heard, to have been guilty of bribery, or of having received bribes, or to have occasioned costs, charges, and expenses to have been incurred by having brought forward frivolous and vexatious charges of bribery against any other person or persons, and the Speaker shall deliver to the agent of the House of Commons, or of the party or parties, a certificate, signed by himself, expressing the amount of the costs and expenses to be paid by each of the said parties, with the name or description of the party liable to pay the same; and such certificate shall be conclusive evidence of the amount of and all other matters to establish the demand, and the liability of the several parties to pay the same.

16. That all costs, charges, and expenses mentioned or referred to in the report of any committee made under the authority of this act shall be ascertained and allowed by the same person, and in the same manner, as the costs, charges, and expenses of petitions reported to be frivolous and vexatious are now by law required to be ascertained and allowed; and all the several provisions relating to costs upon frivolous and vexatious petitions, and to the Speaker's certificate of the amount, and to the recovery thereof, shall extend to and apply, so far as may be, to costs, charges, and expenses payable under the authority of this act, as fully and effectually as if the same were re-enacted by this act, the Speaker's said certificate being hereby declared to be conclusive evidence of all and every the matters necessary to the establishment of the demand, and of the liability of all parties and persons mentioned therein as liable thereto.

17. That it shall be lawful for the agent appointed by the Speaker as aforesaid, or the party or parties named in the certificate, to demand the payment of the whole amount of such taxed costs and expenses, so certified as above, from any one or more of the persons herein made liable to the payment thereof, and, in case of nonpayment thereof, in his or her name to recover the same by action of debt in any of her Majesty's courts of record at Westminster or Dublin, or in the court of session in Scotland, in which action it shall be sufficient for the plaintiff to declare that the defendant or defendants is or are indebted to him in the sum mentioned in the said certificate; and the said plaintiff shall, upon filing the said declaration, together with the said certificate, and affidavit of the handwriting of the Speaker thereto, be at liberty to sign judgment as for want of plea by nil dicit, and take out execution for the said sum so mentioned in the said certificate, together with the costs of the said action, according to due course of law; and no writ of error shall be allowed, and the validity of such certificate shall not be questioned, in any court, upon the allegation of any matter or thing anterior to the date thereof; and the said agent or party or parties named in the certificate shall pay over to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury the amount of the several sums which he or they shall recover or receive in respect of such costs in and by such action or otherwise.

18. That the amount of any costs payable to the person appointed by the Attorney-General as aforesaid shall, upon the issuing of the Speaker's certificate, be held and deemed a debt upon record due to her Majesty.

19. That in every case it shall be lawful for any person or persons, from whom the amount of such costs and expenses shall have been so recovered, to recover in like manner from the other persons, or any of them, (if such there shall be), who are jointly liable to the payment of the said costs, expenses, and fees, a proportionate share thereof, according to the number of persons so liable, and according to the extent of the liability of each person.

20. And whereas a practice has prevailed in certain boroughs and places of making payments by or on behalf of candidates to the voters in such manner that doubts have been entertained whether such payments are to be deemed bribery; be it declared and enacted, That the payment or gift of any sum of money, or other valuable consideration whatsoever, to any voter, before, during, or after any election, or to any person on his behalf, or to any person related to him by kindred or affinity, and which shall be so paid or given on account of such voter having voted or having refrained from voting, or being about to vote or refrain from voting, at the said election, whether the same shall have been paid or given under the name of head money, or any other name whatsoever, and whether such payment shall have been in compliance with any usage or practice, or not, shall be deemed bribery.

21. That all the foregoing provisions of this act, so far as the same are applicable thereto, shall apply to any election which may have taken place, or which may take place, after the 1st day of June, 1842.

22. And whereas the provisions of an act passed in the 7 & 8 Will. 3, [c. 25], intitled "An Act for preventing Charges and Expenses in Elections of Members to serve in Parliament," have been found insufficient to prevent corrupt treating at elections, and it is expedient to extend such provisions; be it enacted, That every candidate or person elected to serve in parliament for any county, riding, or division of a county, or for any city, borough, or district of boroughs, who shall, from and after the passing of this act, by himself, or by or with any person, or in any manner, directly or indirectly, give or provide, or cause or knowingly allow to be given or provided, wholly or partly at his expense, or pay wholly or in part any expenses incurred for any meat, drink, entertainment, or provision to or for any person, at any time, either before, during, or after any such election, for the purpose of corruptly influencing such person, or any other person, to give or to refrain from giving his vote in any such election, or for the purpose of corruptly rewarding such person, or any other person, for having given or refrained from giving his vote at any such election, shall be incapable of being elected or sitting in parliament for that county, riding or division of a county, or for that city, borough, or district of boroughs, during the parliament for which such election shall be holden.

23. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of parliament.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The following gentlemen have been appointed Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—William Downman, jun., of Sudbury, Suffolk; and Edward Delves Broughton, of Nantwich, Cheshire.

A DOUCEUR will be given to a SOLICITOR in LONDON who will undertake to conduct a Suit in Chancery by Forma Pauperis (a good cause). Address, pre-paid, to A. B. C., Great Northern Advertiser Office, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

LAW.—A Gentleman who has served under articles in the Country, would be happy to meet with an ENGAGEMENT as CLERK under the Superintendence of the Principal. Has no objection to Town or Country. Address X. V., Jurist Office, 3, Chancery-lane.

LAW.—A Gentleman, lately out of his articles, the first four years and a half of which were passed in two offices of considerable practice in Lincolnshire, and the remaining six months in a large office in London, is anxious to meet with a SITUATION as MANAGING or ASSISTANT CLERK for a year or two previous to entering the Profession. The Advertiser has chiefly directed his attention to Conveyancing, and is not without some experience in the other branches of the Law. The most unexceptionable references will be given. Apply, by pre-paid letter, to R. A., Mr. Taylor, Solicitor, 14, John-street, Bedford-row, London.

LAW.—TO BE DISPOSED OF, a moderate, respectable PRACTICE and LAW LIBRARY in a dry and healthy market-town about thirty miles from London, on the borders of three counties, in a good Conveyancing District. The Business has been established for upwards of Half a Century. The Offices are attached to an excellent family residence let to the present proprietor of the business for a term of years, with power to determine or purchase at his option on notice. The Lease of the Premises, as also the Furniture, &c., (which is handsome and modern), may be treated for.

N. B. Full Particulars and Reference as to extent of Practice may be had on application to A. B., Mr. Sweet's, 3, Chancery-lane, London.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 24, 1842.

On the 1st of the present month, an Act of considerable importance in some of the manufacturing districts came into operation—we allude to the “Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to the Copyright of Designs for ornamenting Articles of Manufacture.” (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100—see ante, p. 331). By that Act, the old Acts 27 Geo. 3, c. 38; 29 Geo. 3, c. 19; 34 Geo. 3, c. 23; 2 Vict. c. 13; and 2 Vict. c. 17, for securing a copyright in designs, as applied to certain articles of manufacture, are repealed from and after the 1st September, 1842, except as regards copyrights created by those Acts; and those are still to subsist for the term, and partly subject to the regulations fixed by the repealed Acts.

The present Act gives a copyright of varied duration, according to the subject-matter of it, to the proprietor of any new and original design, (except for the matters included in the 38 Geo. 3, c. 71, and 54 Geo. 3, c. 56), applied to the ornamenting of any article of manufacture. The words of the 3rd section are, “with regard to any new and original design, whether such design be applicable to the ornamenting of any article of manufacture, or of any substance, artificial or natural, or partly artificial and partly natural; and that whether such design be so applicable for the pattern, or for the shape or configuration, or for the ornament thereof, or for any two or more of such purposes, and by whatever means such design may be so applicable, whether by printing, or by painting, or by embroidery, or by weaving, or by sewing, or by modelling, or by casting, or by embossing, or by engraving, or by staining, or by any other means whatsoever, manual, mechanical, or chemical, separate or combined; be it enacted, that the proprietor of every such design not previously published, either within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland or elsewhere, shall have the sole right to apply the same to any articles of manufacture or to any such substances as aforesaid,” &c. &c.; and then follows a statement of the different terms for which copyright in designs may be held, according to the class of manufacture or substance to the ornamenting of which the design is applicable.

With regard to what may be the subject of copyright in a design, the Act is plainly intended not to apply to that kind of subject-matter which is proper for a patent. The subject-matter is to be a new “design,” and a design applicable to “ornamenting;” and it is clear from the language of the Act that it must be some arrangement of mere form or figure, however produced or applied, tending to or having the purpose of ornament. There may however arise, perhaps, considerable difficulty in determining in all cases what will be a “design” within the meaning of the Act; and cases may be easily conceived in which it might be within the election of an inventor, whether to take letters patent for his invention, or a copyright under this Act for the result produced by it. For instance, suppose that the particular kind of ornament called, we believe, generally “engine turning,” were now for the first time discovered, would it or would it not be a design within the meaning of this Act? It is undoubtedly a figure or combination of figures applied to ornament, as much as any new combination of lines and figures entering into the pattern of a printed calico or shawl; and we should incline to think that such a combination of curved lines, intended for, and producing ornament, would, if original, be a design within the meaning of the Act.

The Act may thus, perhaps, in some cases, have an unforeseen beneficial effect, by affording cheap protection by way of a short term of copyright, for the use of an ornamental design, where the heavy expense of obtaining letters patent for the machinery by which it is produced, might otherwise preclude the inventor from obtaining any protection.

The Act requires that the design, in order to support a copyright, should not have been "published;" but it is silent as to what shall constitute publication. And on that point there will be, we doubt not, very frequent difficulty. With regard to inventions the subject of letters patent, the words of the statute (21 Jac. 1, c. 3, s. 6) are, "which others at the time of making such letters patent and grants shall not use." And the like words are to be found in the 2nd section of Lord Brougham's Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83) in respect to confirming letters patent, where the patentee appears not to have been the real inventor. The Court must be satisfied, in order to permit confirmation, that the invention had not been "publicly and generally used." In neither of these statutes is the word "publish" or "publication" to be found. The rule, however, in regard to patents, as to what constitutes publication, appears to be, that, if the invention has been either actually publicly used, or so known that the public had constructively the use of it, that is, the actual power to use it, there has been a publication fatal to the patent. Probably the same doctrine, and with such exceptions, as obtain with regard to patents, will be applied to the term "published" in this Act. There can be no question, for instance, that the publication of a design, before the date of the copyright, in any book or print, or by the sale of an article impressed with it, will be a publication within the meaning of the Act. But it seems probable that the exceptional rules of the law of patents, as to experimental and confidential user, will be applied in determining what is publication under this Act.

The 4th section of the Act gives rise to a consideration of great importance. It will be observed, that, under that section, the inventor of a new design, in order to entitle himself to the benefit of the Act, must comply with several requisites. He must, before publication, register it according to the act; and register his name as proprietor; and after publication, every article published, to which the design is applied, must be marked with the letters "Rd" and certain other figures or marks pointed out by the act. Now on this the question arises, whether the omission after publication to put the proper marks on any one or more of the articles issued, will have the effect of wholly avoiding the title of the designer, or whether it will only deprive him of the special remedies given by the act. In favour of the latter view it may certainly be contended, that the Act, by giving specific remedies of an unusual and summary nature for infringement, (sects. 7 and 8), and by declaring (sect. 9) that it does not destroy or interfere with such rights of action as the proprietor of copyright would have independently of the Act, seems itself to distinguish between the right of property given by the 3rd section, and the benefit in the shape of remedies conferred by the 7th and 8th sections. And it may be argued, that, in the 4th section, the Act does not intend total forfeiture of the right by reason of neglect of the formalities prescribed, but only suspension of the special remedies given by the Act. Indeed, it is difficult to suppose that the Legislature could intend to give to a single inadvertent omission of a prescribed formality, the effect of wholly avoiding the title conferred by it.

But on the other hand it must be observed, that the words of the 4th section are very decided and comprehensive. It declares that no person shall be entitled to "the benefit of the Act," unless besides inventing a design, he has done certain acts, and shall continue to do certain others. Now as the inventor of the design has no right of property exclusive of that conferred by the Act, his title is as much the "benefit of the Act" as the remedies given him to defend it. Moreover, supposing that the intention of the Act is to give, by the 3rd section, a title, and in the 4th to refer only to the special remedies given by the statute, still the evidence of title must be an article impressed with the design according to the forms prescribed by the statute. If therefore a person claiming copyright under the statute were to bring his action for infringement, and the defendant answered that he had not infringed; for that he had not copied from any article bearing the design of the plaintiff duly impressed under the Act, but had copied from an article bearing a similar design but not duly marked, and therefore not the property of the plaintiff, the question would be, whether such article not duly marked could be received as evidence of any title in the plaintiff, or whether it would not be evidence of the existence of some other design similar to that of the plaintiff, and being publici juris. If it were so held, it is plain that practically there would be an end of the plaintiff's copyright. Until this point has received judicial determination, it is not too much to say, at least, that no person claiming copyright under the statute, should omit on any account to have every article published by him duly marked according to the 4th section.

On the question what constitutes infringement, and what remedies are given by the Act to punish it, we have at present only to observe, firstly, that it seems by sect. 7, that, as to applying any design protected by copyright, to any manufacture or substance for the purpose of ornament, it is necessary, in order to amount to an infringement, that it should be applied for the purpose of sale; and that as to the mode of dealing with any article impressed with the copyright design, it will be infringement to expose such article for sale, as well as actually to publish or sell it*. And secondly, that although no express reservation is to be found in the statute of the right to apply to a Court of Equity for the remedy by injunction, yet as the institution of a suit in equity is indirectly contemplated by the 10th section, there seems no reason to doubt, that, independently of the general rule, that the giving of special remedies by an act of parliament does not exclude other lawful remedies, unless they are excluded by express words, (Sheriff v. Coates, 1 Russ. & My. 159; Coates v. Clarence Railway Company, 1d. 181), the proprietor of copyright under this statute will be entitled to the remedy by bill in equity, as well as to the special summary remedies given by the Act, and to the common-law remedy by action.

MASTER IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed William Thrush Jefferson, of Northallerton, Yorkshire, Gent., to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

* The rule is otherwise with regard to infringement of a patent on account of the special wording of letters patent. (Minter v. Williams, 4 Adol. & Ell. 251).

CAP. CIII.

An Act for abolishing certain Offices of the High Court of Chancery in England. [10th August, 1842.]

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the 28th day of October next after the passing of this act the following offices of the High Court of Chancery, namely, the offices of clerks of the inrolments and the deputies of such clerks, comptrollers of the hampers, six clerks, sworn clerks, and waiting clerks, (except as to the recovery of fees and charges for business done heretofore, or to be done on or before the said 28th day of October, and of all costs and expenses occasioned by the nonpayment of such fees and charges, and saving to every person who shall be a sworn clerk or waiting clerk on the said 28th day of October, except while he shall hold any office or employment under this act, all the rights of being admitted and practising as a solicitor in the courts of equity, and of being admitted and practising as an attorney in the courts of law, to which he would have been entitled as such sworn clerk or waiting clerk if this act had not been passed), shall be and the same are hereby abolished.

2. That from and after the said 28th day of October all inrolments, records, and other documents in the custody of the officers of the said abolished offices, and all their bill books, case books, and indexes in respect of the said abolished offices, shall be transferred to the custody of such persons as the Master of the Rolls shall from time to time by any order direct.

3. That from and after the said 28th day of October the clerks in the petty bag shall be nominal attorneys in all causes in the petty bag in which six clerks might have been such attorneys if this act had not been passed, and the entry by any clerk of the petty bag of rules in causes in the petty bag shall have all the effect such entry could have had if this act had not been passed, and a similar entry had been made by a six clerk; and from and after the said 28th day of October all inrolments which if this act had not been passed would have been under the management of the clerks of the inrolments and their deputies shall be under the management of an officer to be denominated the "clerk of inrolments in Chancery," and all duties and authorities which if this act had not been passed could have been performed and exercised by the said six clerks as comptrollers of the hampers and riding clerk shall be performed and exercised by the said clerk of inrolments in Chancery, and such clerk of inrolments in Chancery shall be entitled under this act to a salary of 1200*l.* per annum; and from and after the said 28th day of October the records, writs, and rules of the High Court of Chancery which if this act had not been passed would or might have been under the management of the six clerks and sworn clerks or waiting clerks of the said court shall be under the management of officers to be denominated "clerks of records and writs," every one of whom shall be entitled under this act to a salary of 1200*l.* per annum; and from and after the said 28th day of October the taxing of costs in the said court shall be conducted by officers to be denominated "taxing Masters," every one of whom shall have been a sworn clerk of the said court, or shall for twelve years, or for periods making together twelve years or upwards, have practised as a solicitor of the said court, and every such taxing Master shall be entitled under this act to a salary of 2000*l.* per annum; and every clerk of inrolments in Chancery, clerk of records and writs, and taxing Master, shall hold his office during his good behaviour, and shall discharge his duties in person, except where otherwise provided by this act, or any regulation to be made under this act, and may be removed from his office by the Lord Chancellor for misconduct; and the business to be transacted by such clerk of inrolments in Chancery, clerk of records and writs, and taxing Masters, respectively, shall be as well the management of inrolments, comptrollership of the hampers, management of records, writs, and rules, and the taxing of costs as aforesaid, as also such other business (if any) connected with the Court of Chancery as the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors for the time being, or any two of them, shall from time to time by any order direct; and the places, times, and manner in which the same shall be conducted shall be, in the case of taxing Masters, such as the Lord Chancellor lor, and in the case of the other officers such as the Master of the Rolls, shall from time to time by any order direct.

4. That David Drew, Esq., one of the deputies of the clerks of the inrolments, shall be the first clerk of inrolments in chancery; Frederick Bedwell, one of the sworn clerks of the Court of Chancery, John Alexander Berry, one of the agents in the Six Clerks Office, John Veal, one other of the agents in the Six Clerks Office, and Seth Charles Ward, one other of the sworn clerks of the Court of Chancery, the first clerks of records and writs; and Henry Ramsay Baines, one other of the sworn clerks of the Court of Chancery, Robert Bayly Follett, one of the solicitors of the Court of Chancery, George Gatty, one other of the sworn clerks of the Court of Chancery, Philip Martineau, one other of the solicitors of the Court of Chancery, and Richard Mills and John Wainwright, two others of the sworn clerks of the Court of Chancery, Esqrs. the first taxing masters, under this act; and that as often as the clerk of inrolments in Chancery, or any clerk of records and writs hereby appointed, or any of his successors, shall die, or resign or be removed from his office, the Master of the Rolls shall have power to appoint a clerk of inrolments in Chancery, or a clerk of records and writs, (as the case may be), in the room of the clerk of inrolments in Chancery or clerk of records and writs who shall so die, resign, or be removed; and that as often as any taxing master hereby appointed, or any of his successors, shall die, or resign or be removed from his office, the Lord Chancellor shall have power to appoint a taxing master in the room of the taxing master who shall so die, resign, or be removed: Provided always, that it shall not be imperative on the Master of the Rolls to make any such appointment of a clerk of inrolments in Chancery or clerk of records and writs, while he shall consider the same unnecessary; provided further, that no such appointment as aforesaid shall be made by the Master of the Rolls unless with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor, nor shall any such appointment as aforesaid be made of a clerk of records and writs while there shall be four or more such clerks, nor of a taxing master while there shall be six or more such masters, unless the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, shall by any order declare such appointment to be necessary.

5. That the Lord Chancellor may from time to time, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, appoint additional taxing masters, and the Master of the Rolls may from time to time, with such approbation as aforesaid, appoint additional clerks of records and writs: Provided always, that no such additional appointment shall be made by the Master of the Rolls unless the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, shall by any order declare such appointment to be necessary; provided further, that the number of clerks of records and writs under this act shall not at any one time exceed six, and the number of taxing masters under this act shall not at any one time exceed nine.

6. That in case of absence, from illness or other reasonable cause, it shall be lawful for any clerk of inrolments in Chancery, clerk of records and writs, or taxing master, under this act, to appoint a deputy, such deputy, and also the occasion for such appointment, being first approved in the case of a taxing master by the Lord Chancellor, and in the other cases by the Master of the Rolls; and that in case any clerk of inrolments in Chancery, clerk of records and writs, or taxing master under this act, being absent as aforesaid, shall neglect to appoint such deputy, or to renew the appointment of a deputy, the Lord Chancellor in the case of a taxing master, and in the other cases the Master of the Rolls, may appoint a deputy; and every deputy to be appointed as aforesaid shall have all the powers and authorities of his principal, and shall be paid such sum out of the salary of his principal as the Lord Chancellor in the case of a taxing master, and in other cases as the Master of the Rolls, shall direct; and during vacations the whole of the business of the following officers, (namely), the clerk of inrolments in Chancery, and clerks of records and writs, may be performed by such one or more of the same officers, and upon such terms, as the Master of the Rolls shall by any order direct.

7. That it shall be lawful for every clerk of inrolments in Chancery, clerk of records and writs, and taxing master, under this act, and also the clerk of affidavits of the Court of Chancery, to administer the oaths and take the affirmations and attestations of honour which he may from time to time be required to administer and take by any order made by the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid.

8. That all persons swearing, affirming, or attesting before any clerk of inrolments in Chancery, or clerk of records and writs, or taxing master, under this act, or clerk of affidavits, shall be liable to all such penalties, punishments, and consequences for any wilful and corrupt false swearing or perjury contained therein as if the matter sworn, affirmed, or attested had been sworn, affirmed, or attested before the High Court of Chancery, or any of the Masters in Ordinary thereof.

9. That every clerk of inrolments in Chancery under this act may appoint, to assist him in his business, three clerks, and as many more as the Master of the Rolls shall from time to time by any order direct; and that every clerk of inrolment in Chancery may from time to time remove such clerks, and fill up all vacancies in the number of such clerks, whether occasioned by death, resignation, or removal; and every such clerk shall be entitled under this act to such salary as the Master of the Rolls shall by any order direct, provided that the whole amount payable for such salaries shall not in any one year exceed the sum which, if equally divided between them, would admit of a salary of 250*l.* for every such clerk; and that every clerk of records and writs under this act may appoint to assist him in his business three clerks, and as many more as the Master of the Rolls shall from time to time by any order direct; and that every clerk of records and writs may from time to time remove such clerks, and fill up all vacancies in the number of such clerks, whether occasioned by death, resignation, or removal; and every such clerk shall be entitled under this act to such salary as the Master of the Rolls shall by any order direct, provided the whole amount for such salaries shall not in any one year exceed the sum which, if equally divided between them, would admit of a salary of 250*l.* for every such clerk; and that every taxing master under this act may appoint, to assist him in his business, one clerk, and as many more as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct; and every taxing master may from time to time remove such clerks, and fill up all vacancies in the number of such clerks, whether occasioned by death, resignation, or removal; and every such clerk shall be entitled under this act to a salary of 250*l.* per annum: provided always, that no clerk shall be appointed by a clerk of inrolments in Chancery, or clerk of records and writs, to fill up a vacancy, while he shall have three or more clerks, unless the Master of the Rolls shall by any order declare such appointment to be necessary, and no clerk shall be appointed by a taxing master to fill up a vacancy while he shall have a clerk or clerks, unless the Lord Chancellor shall by any order declare such appointment to be necessary.

10. That if any clerk of inrolments in Chancery, clerk of records and writs, or taxing master, or any clerk of any clerk of inrolments in Chancery, clerk of records and writs, or taxing master, shall, for any thing done or pretended to be done relating to his office or employment under this act, or under colour of doing any thing relating to his said office or employment, wilfully demand or accept, or appoint or allow any person whatsoever to take for him or on his account, or for or on account of any person by him named, any fee, gift, gratuity, or emolument, or any thing of value, other than what is allowed or directed to be taken by him under this act, or any order made under this act, the person so offending may, upon complaint made to the Lord Chancellor, be removed from any office or employment he may hold under this act.

11. That from and after the 28th October next after the passing of this act no person while he holds any office or employment under this act shall practise as a barrister, or as a solicitor or attorney; and that from and after the said 28th October every solicitor or attorney who shall accept any office or employment under this act shall be struck off the roll of solicitors of the High Court of Chancery, and off the roll of attorneys of any of her Majesty's courts of record at Westminster on which his name may be.

12. That it shall be lawful for every person who shall at the passing of this act be a clerk of the inrolments, deputy of such clerk, comptroller of the hanaper, riding clerk, six clerk, sworn clerk, waiting clerk, agent, or record keeper, and whose office or employment shall be abolished or affected by this act, to make a claim for compensation within twelve calendar months after the passing of this act to the Lord Chancellor, who shall proceed, in such manner and upon such average as he may think proper, to inquire what compensation ought to be made to any such claimant, and what were the fees and emoluments in respect of which the same should be allowed; and in every case in which such claim shall be established to the satisfaction of the Lord Chancellor, he is hereby authorized and empowered to determine, by an order, the amount of the annual compensation which shall seem to him to be just and reasonable for the loss sustained by such claimant, being in the case of a clerk of the inrolments or deputy as aforesaid, or comptroller of the hanaper, riding clerk, six clerk, sworn clerk, or waiting clerk, not less than three fourths nor more than the whole, and in the case of an agent or record keeper not less than two thirds nor more than the whole, of the sum which shall be determined by the Lord Chancellor to be the net annual value of such fees and emoluments: provided always, that no other period shall be fixed for any such average as aforesaid than three years, expiring on any day between the passing of this act and the 1st November next, or some portion of such three years; and that for the purpose of taking any average in the case of a sworn clerk or waiting clerk, the fees and emoluments of any business previous to the acquisition of such business by any sworn clerk or waiting clerk claiming compensation in respect thereof shall be deemed to have been the fees and emoluments no of such sworn clerk or waiting clerk: provided further, that average shall be taken or compensation awarded in respect of any business which shall be acquired after the passing of this act.

13. That the executors or administrators of every person who at the passing of this act shall be a clerk of the inrolments or deputy as aforesaid, comptroller of the hanaper, riding clerk, six clerk, sworn clerk, waiting clerk, agent, or record keeper, and who shall die after the said 28th October next after the passing of this act, and before compensation shall be awarded to him, shall be entitled to make such claim and receive such compensation for the time which shall elapse between the 28th October next after the passing of this act and the day of the death of such clerk of the inrolments, deputy as aforesaid, comptroller of the hanaper, riding clerk, six clerk, sworn clerk, waiting clerk, agent, or record keeper, as such clerk of the inrolments, deputy as aforesaid, comptroller of the hanaper, riding clerk, six clerk, sworn clerk, waiting clerk, agent, or record keeper would if living have been entitled to claim and receive, and such compensation shall form part to the personal estate of such clerk of the inrolments, deputy as aforesaid, comptroller of the hanaper, riding clerk, sworn clerk, six clerk, waiting clerk, agent, or record keeper.

14. And inasmuch as the business of a sworn clerk and of a waiting clerk has been treated as a subject of sale and succession, and has commonly been sold for half the profits during the seven years next after a sale, be it therefore enacted, That a yearly sum equal to half the annual sum to be awarded as compensation to any sworn clerk or waiting clerk, or which, in the case of any sworn clerk or waiting clerk who shall die before the said 28th October next after the passing of this act, or after the said 28th October and before compensation shall be awarded to him, might have been awarded to him if he had survived the said 28th October and the award of compensation, shall for seven years, to be computed from the said 28th October next after the passing of this act, or the day of the decease of such sworn clerk or waiting clerk, (whichever shall last happen), be paid to the executors, administrators, or assigns of such sworn clerk or waiting clerk, as part of his personal estate.

15. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to award such compensation, if any, as he may think fit to the persons who, on the 28th October next after the passing of this act, shall be clerk of the public office in Chancery, and junior clerks or copying clerks of the Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, for any loss they may respectively sustain under this act, and also to persons whose emoluments may be diminished or abolished under this act by reason of any change or discontinuance of the sealing or signing of writs.

16. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, in the meantime and until compensation shall be awarded and determined in manner aforesaid, to order such allowances on account of such compensation as he shall think fit.

17. That an account of all such compensations and allowances as shall be granted under this act shall, within fourteen days next after the same shall be so granted, be laid upon the table of the House of Commons, if parliament shall be then assembled, or if parliament shall not be then assembled then within fourteen days after the meeting of parliament then next following.

18. That during such time as any person hereby appointed to any office, or hereafter to be appointed to any office connected with any court of law or equity, or under the crown, or in any public department under the crown, shall continue in such office, such portion (if any) as the Lord Chancellor shall direct of the annual compensation (if any) payable to such person under this act shall cease to be payable to such person: provided always, that no compensation shall be so reduced as to make the annual amount to be received during such time as aforesaid by any such person in respect of compensation and salary together less than the full net annual value of the fees and emoluments in respect of which such compensation shall have been awarded.

19. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order made on a petition presented to him for that purpose after the 28th October next after the passing of this act, to order (if he shall think fit) to be paid to any person executing the office of clerk of inrolments in Chancery, clerk of records and writs, or taxing master, under this act, who shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, or shall have continued in his office for twenty years, and shall be desirous of resigning the same, an annuity not exceeding two third parts of the yearly salary which such person shall under this act be entitled to at the time of presenting such petition, to be paid out of the funds and in the manner upon and in which salaries under this act are charged: provided always, that the time during which any person hereby appointed or to be hereafter appointed to the office of clerk of inrolments in Chancery, clerk of records and writs, or taxing master, under this act, shall have been a six clerk, sworn clerk, waiting clerk, or agent, shall be added to the time during which such person shall be clerk of inrolments in Chancery, clerk of records and writs, or taxing master, under this act, and shall for the purposes of this clause be deemed and taken as part of the time during which such person shall have continued in the office of clerk of inrolments in Chancery, clerk of records and writs, or taxing master, under this act: provided always, that the retiring allowance to any person to whom compensation shall have been granted under this act shall merge in such compensation, except so far as such allowance shall exceed in yearly amount the yearly sum so granted to such person for compensation.

20. That all salaries, compensations, allowances on account of compensation, and retiring allowances, under this act, shall grow due from day to day, but shall be payable on the 3rd February, the 3rd May, the 3rd August, and the 3rd November in every year, or on such other days as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct, and shall be paid to the parties entitled thereto, or their respective executors or administrators, out of the fund standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery, intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account."

21. That from and after the said 28th October next after the passing of this act, and thenceforth, except so far as the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, shall from time to time by any order otherwise direct, all fees for business heretofore done by clerks of the inrolments or their deputies, comptrollers of the hanaper, riding clerks, six clerks, sworn clerks, or waiting clerks, in respect of the said abolished offices, and which from and after the said 28th October shall be done by any officer of the Court of Chancery, either under the provisions of this act or any order duly made for providing for the performance of such business, shall continue payable, and that from and immediately after the transfer, by this act or any order made as aforesaid, to any of the officers under this act, of any business heretofore done by any other officers of the said court, all fees now or at the time of such transfer payable for such business shall (except so far as the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, may from time to time by any order otherwise direct), continue payable; and all fees to continue payable as aforesaid shall be received by the officers of the said court by whom the business shall be done for which such fees shall be payable, and shall be paid into the Bank of England, to be placed to the account there standing in the name of the said Accountant-General, intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account," at such times and under such regulations as the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, shall by any order direct.

22. And whereas it is expedient that the said fund should at all times be kept up to an amount sufficient to satisfy the charges thereon as well under this act as under any former act: And whereas in consequence of this act, and the regulations to be made under it, some of the fees heretofore or under this act payable to the said fund may be abolished and others may be diminished, by which the said fund may be reduced so as to be insufficient for the purposes of this act and of the other charges on the said fund; be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, from time to time by any order to impose such fees on any proceedings in the Court of Chancery, or on business in any of the offices of the said court, (including the offices under this act), as he may think necessary or expedient for maintaining the said fund, so that it may at all times be sufficient to satisfy all the charges thereon as well under this act as any former act.

23. That if on the 28th October in any year after the year 1842 there shall be a surplus standing to the credit of the said account intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account," after payment of the several charges hereby or by any former act imposed thereon, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor by any order to direct that such part thereof as to the said Lord Chancellor shall seem fit shall be invested in the purchase of parliamentary or government securities in the name of the said Accountant-General, to be placed to the account intituled "Account of Monies placed out to provide for the Officers of the High Court of Chancery;" and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, in like manner, to direct the investment of the dividends or interest to accrue from time to time on the securities now or at any time hereafter under this act or any former act to be placed to the said last-mentioned account, or so much of such dividends and interest as he shall think fit, in the purchase of parliamentary or government securities, in the name of the said Accountant-General, to be by him placed to the credit of the said last-mentioned account; and as often as there shall be a deficiency in the said account intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account" at any of the times appointed for payment of any of the charges hereby or by any former act imposed thereon, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to direct the said Accountant-General to make good such deficiency, by carrying over and placing to the said account intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account" a sum sufficient for that purpose out of the interest and dividends to arise from the government or parliamentary securities standing to the said account intituled "Account of Monies placed out to provide for the Officers of the High Court of Chancery," or by a sale of so much of the said securities as may be necessary for that purpose; and as often as such last-mentioned securities, and the interest and dividends thereof, shall be insufficient to meet any such deficiency, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to direct the said Accountant-General to make good such last-mentioned deficiency, by carrying over and placing to the said account intituled "The Sutors Fee Fund Account" a sum sufficient for that purpose out of the interest and dividends that have arisen or may hereafter arise from the government or parliamentary securities now or hereafter to be placed to two several accounts in the Bank of England standing in the name of the said Accountant-General, and intituled "Account of Monies placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Sutors of the High Court of Chancery," and "Account of Securities purchased with surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Monies placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Sutors of the High Court of Chancery," or either of them: Provided always, that the charges under this act on any of the aforesaid funds shall rank next after the charges thereon at the passing of this act.

24. That as between compensations and allowances on account of compensations, and the salaries and other monies hereby charged on the funds hereinbefore mentioned, compensations and allowances on account of compensations shall have priority of payment over all such salaries and other monies; and further, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to purchase all or any of the compensations and retiring allowances awarded under this act; and the money to be paid for every such purchase shall be paid out of the said fund intituled "An Account of Monies placed out to provide for the Officers of the High Court of Chancery," but without prejudice to the charges under this or any former act for the time being existing on the said fund: Provided always, that no such purchase shall be made unless with the consent of the party entitled to the compensation or retiring allowance so to be purchased.

25. That the surplus interest and annual produce which hath arisen and shall arise from the monies placed out on the several accounts intituled "Account of Monies placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Sutors of the High Court of Chancery," and "Account of Securities purchased with surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Monies placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Sutors in the High Court of Chancery," beyond what shall be sufficient to answer the purposes of this and the several other acts relating to such securities, and also the interest produced from the securities purchased with such surplus interest and annual produce, shall from time to time be placed out in the purchase of government or parliamentary securities, in the name of the Accountant-General of the said court, and placed to the credit of the said account intitled "Account of Securities purchased with surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Monies placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery."

26. That if at any time hereafter the whole or any part of the monies placed out to the two several accounts intitled "Account of Monies placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," and "Account of Securities purchased with surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Monies placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," or to be placed out in pursuance of this act, shall be wanted to answer any of the demands of the suitors of the said Court of Chancery, then and in such case the said court may and shall direct the whole or any part of such monies to be called in, and the securities in which the same, and the surplus interest and dividends hereinbefore mentioned, shall be placed, to be sold and disposed of, in order that the suitors of the said court may at all times be paid their respective demands out of the common and general cash belonging to such suitors.

27. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order or orders of the said Court of Chancery, to authorize the change of any security or securities or of any part of the securities to be purchased in pursuance of this act.

28. That it shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls from time to time to appoint such messengers as he shall consider necessary for the business of the offices under this act, and also such servants as he shall consider necessary for the care and cleaning of the said offices, and from time to time to remove any such messengers and servants, and appoint others; and the wages of every messenger and servant shall be such, and shall be paid out of the funds hereby charged with salaries, or such of them, and at such times and in such manner, as the Master of the Rolls shall by any order direct.

29. That the ground and hereditaments by an act passed in the 15th year of Geo. 3, [c. 56], intitled "An Act for applying the Funds provided for rebuilding the Offices of the Six Clerks of the King's Court of Chancery by an Act made in the 14th Year of the Reign of his present Majesty, intitled 'An Act for rebuilding the Office of the Six Clerks of the King's Court of Chancery, and for erecting Offices for the Register and Accountant-General of the said Court, for the better preserving the Records, Decrees, Orders, and Books of Account kept in such Offices,' in building Offices for the said Six Clerks in the Garden of Lincoln's Inn, instead of rebuilding the present Six Clerks' Offices in Chancery-lane, and for other Purposes," vested in the six clerks, together with all buildings thereon, shall, for all the estate of the said six clerks therein under the said act, and subject to the restrictions and with the exemptions in the said act mentioned, from and immediately after the 28th day of October next after the passing of this act, be vested in William Russell, Esq., Accountant-General of the said Court of Chancery, and his successors in the said office for ever, in trust to permit the same to be used for such purposes as the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, shall from time to time by any order direct; and further, that all dividends henceforth to arise from 1517l. 9s. 5d. 3l. per centum Consolidated Bank Annuities, transferred into the name of the said Accountant-General under the said recited act, and now standing in such name to an account intitled "Money arising by Sale of the Six Clerks' Office," shall be carried to and become part of the said fund intitled "The Suitors Fee Fund Account."

30. That it shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls, by virtue of any order made for that purpose, to order payment, at such times and in such manner, and out of such of the funds hereby charged as he shall think fit, of all such sums as shall appear to him to be reasonable and proper to be paid for the inrolling deeds and documents, and the making and writing of office and other copies of records and other documents under the control of the officers appointed by this act, or any of them, and for the care and cleaning of the rooms and buildings in which the offices of persons employed under this act may be held, and for any rent for any such buildings or rooms, and for the repairs and fitting-up of such buildings and rooms, and for the books and stationery which may be required for the business of the said offices, and for coals and candles and other necessary articles for the said offices, and for the discharge of taxes (including land taxes), rates, and other assessments charged upon or payable in respect of the said offices and buildings, or any of them, or to which the officers under this act, or any of them, may be liable in respect thereof.

31. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, to make and issue such orders as he shall think fit, as well in relation to any matter connected with the said abolished offices, and not hereby otherwise provided for, as for carrying the provisions of this act into execution, and also to make and issue such other rules and orders, not being inconsistent with the enactments and provisions of this act, as he shall think fit, for the performance of the business heretofore done in the said abolished offices, and for establishing and settling the practice of the offices hereby created.

32. That any order or orders for the time being made under this act may from time to time be annulled, altered, or varied by the like authority by which any such order or orders shall have been made, and new orders may from time to time be made for any of the purposes of this act by the respective authorities by which orders are hereby authorized to be made.

33. That out of the monies standing to the said account, intitled "The Suitors Fee Fund Account," and also out of the interest arising from the said account intitled "Account of Monies placed out to provide for the Officers of the High Court of Chancery," and also out of the interest arising from the said two accounts intitled respectively "Account of Monies placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," and "Account of Securities purchased with surplus Interest arising from Securities carried to an Account of Monies placed out for the Benefit and better Security of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," or such one or more of the said several funds as the Lord Chancellor shall think fit, the costs and charges incurred in preparing, procuring, and passing this act shall be paid, in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order direct.

34. And whereas by an act passed in the 7 Anne, [c. 20], intitled "An Act for the public registering of Deeds, Conveyances, and Wills, and other Incumbrances, which shall be made of or shall affect any Honors, Manors, Lands, Tenements, or hereditaments within the County of Middlesex after the 29th September, 1709," it is provided that the sworn clerk to execute the office of inrolment in the High Court of Chancery who is appointed to inrol for the county of Middlesex shall be one of the officers for executing the duties of registers and masters for the matters and things in the same act contained: And whereas the said office of inrolment will be abolished by this act, and doubts may arise whether the said officer can any longer continue legally to execute the duties of such register and master as aforesaid; be it therefore enacted, that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to abolish the office of registers or masters for the inrolment of deeds, wills, and other conveyances in the county of Middlesex, or for any other matters or things in the said recited act contained, or to deprive any of the persons now holding such office of registers or masters of that office, and that such persons shall and may henceforth, and until otherwise provided for by law, continue to hold and enjoy such office, and execute all the powers and duties appertaining thereto, in the same manner to all intents and purposes as if this act had not been passed; and if the sworn clerk whose office shall be abolished by this act, and who now holds the office of such register or master as aforesaid, or any of his successors as such register or master, shall die or resign, or otherwise be discharged from the office of register or master, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, until it shall be otherwise directed by parliament, to nominate and appoint some fit and proper person to fill the office of such register or master, such person being a clerk of inrolments in Chancery or a clerk of records and writs under this act, or a barrister, or a solicitor, or an attorney in actual practice, of not less than five years' standing, in the place or stead of the person so dying, resigning, or being discharged from such office; and the person so nominated and appointed by the Lord Chancellor as aforesaid shall, previously to his entering upon or executing such office, take such oath or oaths, and afterwards execute such office, and the powers and duties appertaining thereto, in the same manner to all intents and purposes as the persons executing the same would by law be required and authorised to take and execute if this act had not been passed.

35. That if the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, shall, by any order made and issued before the said 28th October next after the passing of this act, declare that the commencement of this act shall be postponed, then and in such case the day fixed in such order for the commencement of this act shall be taken to have been substituted for the said 28th October throughout every part of this act, except this present clause: provided always, that the commencement of this act shall not by any such order be postponed for more than six calendar months next after the said 28th October.

36. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect the general powers vested in the Lord Chancellor, either solely or otherwise, under any former act.

37. That in the construction of this act the expression "the Lord Chancellor" shall mean and include the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, and Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal of Great Britain for the time being.

38. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed during the present session of parliament.

CAP. CIV.

An Act to explain and amend certain Enactments contained respectively in the Acts for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales, and in Ireland.

[10th August, 1842.]

Whereas by an act passed in the session of parliament held in the 5 & 6 Will. 4, [c. 76,] intituled "An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," it is (amongst other things) enacted, that no person shall be qualified to be elected or to be a councillor or an alderman of any borough during such time as he shall have, directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any contract or employment with, by, or on behalf of the council of such borough, during such time as he shall hold any office or place of profit, other than mayor, in the gift or disposal of the council of such borough: And whereas by another act passed in the session of parliament held in the 3 & 4 Vict. [c. 108,] intituled "An Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in Ireland," it is (amongst other things) enacted, that no person shall be qualified to be elected or to be a councillor, or an alderman, or a municipal commissioner of any such borough, during such time as he shall have, directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any contract or employment with, by, or on behalf of any such council, commissioners, or charitable trustees of such borough: And whereas doubts have arisen as to the extent and meaning of the words "contract" and "office or place of profit" in the said enactments, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed: Be it therefore enacted, &c., That from and after the passing of this act the word "contract" in the said respective enactments shall not extend or be construed to extend to any lease, sale, or purchase of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or to any agreement for any such lease, sale, or purchase, or for the loan of money, or to any security for the payment of money only.

2. That it shall not be lawful for any member of the council of any borough to vote or to take part in the discussion of any matter before the council in which such member shall, directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner or partners, have any pecuniary interest.

3. That immediately from and after the passing of this act it shall be lawful for any person or persons against whom any original writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall have been sued out, commenced, or prosecuted on or before the day of the passing of this act, for the recovery of any pecuniary penalty or penalties incurred under the said enactments (by reason of any extension or construction of the word "contract" therein contained beyond or different from what is herein enacted) to apply to the court in which such original writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall have been sued out, commenced, or prosecuted, if such court shall be sitting, or, if such court shall not be sitting, to any judge of one of the superior courts at Westminster or Dublin, as the case may be, for an order that such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall be discontinued, upon payment of the costs thereof out of pocket incurred to the time of such application being made, such costs to be taxed according to the practice of such court; and every such court or judge is hereby authorised and required, upon such application, and proof that sufficient notice has been given to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, or to his or their attorney, of the application, to make such order as aforesaid; and upon the making such order, and payment or tender of such costs as aforesaid, such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall be forthwith discontinued.

4. That in all cases in which any such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information sued out or commenced on or before the 8th February, 1842, shall have been renewed or continued before the passing of this act, or upon which any declaration shall have been filed or delivered, or other proceeding had, after the said 8th February, and before the passing of this act, it shall be lawful for such court or judge, upon such application and proof as aforesaid to make such order as aforesaid for discontinuing the same, upon payment of the costs out of pocket of all proceedings had on or before the said 8th February, to be taxed as aforesaid, and of such costs out of pocket, if any, of any proceedings had after the said 8th February, as the court or judge making such order shall direct; and upon making such order, and upon payment or tender of such costs, such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall be forthwith discontinued.

5. That in all cases in which any such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall have been sued out or commenced at any time subsequent to the 8th February, 1842, it shall be competent for such court or judge as aforesaid to make such order as aforesaid for discontinuing the same, without payment of any costs, and upon making such order such writ, suit, action, bill, plaint, or information shall be forthwith discontinued.

6. That nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to any action, bill, plaint, or information, or any legal proceeding of any kind whatsoever, in which any judgment shall have passed on or before the day of the passing of this act; but such proceedings may be thereupon had and taken, and any such judgment may be dealt with in all respects, as if this act had not passed.

7. That from and after the passing of this act no municipal commissioner, councillor, alderman, or mayor, in any municipal corporation within the provisions of either of the said acts, shall be deemed to have been or to be disqualified to be elected, or to be such municipal commissioner, councillor, alderman, or mayor, by reason only of his having or having had, directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any lease, sale, or purchase of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any agreement for any such lease, sale, or purchase, or for the loan of money, or in any security for the payment of money only, but all elections of municipal commissioners, councillors, aldermen, or mayors, as aforesaid, shall be deemed and taken to be and to have been valid (unless in cases where judgment may have been obtained before the passing of this act), notwithstanding any such share or interest in any matters herein last aforesaid.

8. That from and after the passing of this act the office of sheriff of any city, town, county of a city or county of a town, (wherein the council are empowered by law to appoint a fit person to execute the office of sheriff), shall not be deemed to be an office or place of profit within the meaning of the said act so as to create any disqualification for any office in the said act mentioned.

9. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of parliament.

CAP. CXVI.

An Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors. [12th August, 1842.]

Whereas it is expedient to protect from all process against the person such persons as have become indebted without any fraud or gross or culpable negligence, so as nevertheless their estates may be duly distributed among their creditors: Be it enacted, &c., That if any person, not being a trader within the meaning of the statutes now in force relating to bankrupts, or if any person being such trader, but owing debts amounting in the whole to less than 300*l.*, shall give notice, according to the schedule to this act annexed, one fourth in number and value of his creditors, and shall cause the same notice to be inserted twice in the London Gazette, and twice in some newspaper circulating within the county wherein he resides, he may present a petition for protection from process to the Court of Bankruptcy, if he has resided twelve calendar months in London or within the London district, or to the commissioner of bankrupt in the country within whose district he may have resided twelve calendar months, which petition shall have annexed to it a full and true schedule of his debts, with the names of his creditors, and the dates of contracting the debts, severally, the nature of the debt, and the security (if any) given for the same, and also of the nature and amount of his property, and of the debts owing to him, with their dates, and the names of his debtors, and the nature of the securities (if any) which he may have for such debts, and which petition shall also set forth any proposal which he may have to make for the payment, in whole or in part, of his debts; and it shall thereupon be lawful for the judge or commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy to whom, by any order of the court, as hereinafter provided, the same shall be referred, or for the commissioner in the country to whom the petition shall be presented, to give, upon the filing of such petition, a protection to the petitioner from all process whatever, either against his person or his property of every description, which protection shall continue in force, and all process be stayed, until the appearance of the petitioner in court, as hereinafter provided; and upon the presentation of any such petition all the estate and effects of the petitioner shall forthwith become vested in the official assignee who shall be nominated by the commissioners acting in the matter of the said petition; and such official assignee shall and may forthwith take possession of so much thereof as can be reasonably obtained and possessed without suit; and the said official assignee shall hold and stand possessed of the same in like manner as official assignees hold and possess estates and effects under and by virtue of the statute relating to bankrupts.

2. That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to hinder or prevent the said insolvent from being arrested or held to bail under the authority of any judge's order for that purpose, in like manner as may now by law be done, notwithstanding any protection which may be granted under the authority of this act.

3. That the Court of Bankruptcy shall appoint a certain rotation in which the commissioners thereof shall hear the matter of such petitions, and shall make from time to time orders touching such rotation, and touching the reference to such petitions, and also touching the commissioner to whom the matter of any petition shall be transferred in case of death, resignation, or removal, and also such orders as they may think right touching the notice of meetings and examinations to be given to creditors, and the publication of such notice; provided that such orders shall be approved of by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal for the time being.

4. That the commissioner so authorized, or the commissioner in the country, (as the case may be), shall, on the day notified by such notice as aforesaid, proceed to examine upon oath the petitioner, and any creditor who may attend such examination, and any witness whom the petitioner or any creditor may call; and the said commissioner may adjourn the examination from time to time, and summon to be examined before him any debtor of such petitioner, or any creditor of such petitioner, or any other person whose evidence may appear necessary for the purposes of the inquiry; and if it shall appear to the said commissioner that the allegations in the petition and the matters in the schedules are true, and that the debts of the petitioner were not contracted by any manner of fraud or breach of trust, or any prosecution against the petitioner whereby he had been convicted of any offence, or without having at the time of becoming indebted reasonable assurance of being able to pay the debts, and that such debts were not contracted by reason of any judgment in any proceeding for breach of the revenue laws, or in any action for breach of promise of marriage, seduction, criminal conversation, libel, slander, assault, battery, malicious arrest, malicious suing out a fiat of bankruptcy, or malicious trespass, and that the petitioner has made a full discovery of his estate, effects, debts, and credits, and has not parted with any of his property since the presenting of his petition, it shall then be lawful for the said commissioner to cause notice to be given that on a certain day, to be named therein, he will proceed to make an order, unless cause be shewn to the contrary; which order shall be called a final order, and shall be for the protection of the person of the petitioner from all process, and for the vesting of his estate and effects in an official assignee, to be named by such commissioner, together with an assignee to be chosen by the majority in number and value of the creditors who may attend before the commissioner on such day, or for the carrying into effect such proposal as the petitioner shall have set forth in his petition, provided that the consideration of such final order may be adjourned from time to time by the commissioner without any fresh notice: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said commissioner, if he shall think fit, to direct in such final order some allowance to be made for the support of the petitioner out of his estate and effects.

5. That at the first examination of the petitioner it shall be lawful for the commissioner to renew the order for protection, and to renew it from time to time until the final order for protection and distribution.

6. That it shall be lawful for the commissioner, by warrant under his hand and seal, to commit to prison any petitioner who shall appear to him to have perjured or made any false statement before him, for such time as he shall think fit, not exceeding one calendar month; and touching all persons other than the petitioner who shall be examined before him, or being lawfully summoned shall refuse or neglect to attend him, the said commissioner shall have the same powers in respect of commitment as he has by any law now in force relating to bankrupts.

7. That from and after the passing of the final order the whole estate, present and future, as well real as personal, and as well in the colonies, dominions, and plantations belonging to her Majesty, as in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, all the effects and all the credits of the petitioner, shall become absolutely vested in the official assignee and assignee chosen by the creditors, without any deed or conveyance, which assignees shall hold the same as fully as if the petitioner had been made a bankrupt and they had been assignees under his fiat, and shall sue and be sued as if they had been assignees under such fiat; and as often as any such assignees shall die or be lawfully removed, and a new assignee duly appointed, all estate, real and personal, and such effects and credits, as were or remained vested in such deceased or removed assignee, shall vest in the new assignee, either alone or jointly with the existing assignees, as the case may require, without any deed or conveyance for that purpose.

8. That where according to any laws now in force any conveyance or assignment of any real or personal property of a petitioner would require to be registered, inrolled, or recorded in any registry office in England, Wales, or Ireland, or in any registry office, court, or other place in Scotland, or any of the dominions, plantations, or colonies belonging to her Majesty, then in every such case such certificate of the appointment of an assignee or assignees as is described in an act passed in the 1 & 2 Will. 4, [c. 56], intituled "An Act to establish a Court in Bankruptcy," shall be registered in the registry office, court, or place wherein such conveyance or assignment as last aforesaid would require to be registered, inrolled, or recorded; and the registry hereby directed shall have the like effect, to all intents and purposes, as the registry, inrolment, or recording of such conveyance or assignment as last aforesaid would have had; and the title of any purchaser of any such property as last aforesaid for valuable consideration, who shall have duly registered, inrolled, or recorded his purchase deed previous to the registry hereby directed, shall not be invalidated by reason of such appointment of an assignee or assignees as aforesaid, or the vesting of such property in him or them consequent thereupon, unless the certificate of such appointment shall be registered as aforesaid within the times following; (that is to say), as regards the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, within two months from the date of such appointment, and as regards all other places, within twelve months from the date thereof.

9. That the said assignees shall be entitled to claim and demand from the said petitioner, at any time after the said final order, any estate and effects acquired by him at any time after such order shall have been made; and all such estate and effects, of what kind soever and wheresoever situate, shall be absolutely vested in such assignees upon their filing a copy of their claim, served upon the petitioner personally, or by leaving it at the place of residence mentioned in his notice of petition, and they shall hold the same in like manner as they held the estate and effects of the petitioner transferred by force of the final order, as hereinbefore provided: provided always, that no assignee of any insolvent shall be authorized by virtue of this act to take possession of any estate or effects which the insolvent shall have acquired or become possessed of after the making of the final order herein mentioned, except under the authority of an order of the said commissioner, or of the Court of Review in Bankruptcy, made for that purpose, and then only to the extent and at the time and in manner directed by such order, and after giving such notices, and doing such acts, matters, and things, as by the rules, orders, and regulations made under the authority of this act shall be required and directed in that behalf.

10. That if any suit or action is brought against any petitioner for or in respect of any debt contracted before the date of filing his petition, it shall be a sufficient plea in bar of the said suit or action that such petition was duly presented, and a final order for protection and distribution made by a commissioner duly authorized, whereof the production of the order signed by the commissioner, with proof of his handwriting, shall be sufficient evidence.

11. That the like evidence of the appointments of assignees shall be received as sufficient to prove such appointments in all courts and places whatsoever as is received by the laws now in force relating to bankrupts to prove such appointments.

12. That it shall be lawful for any creditor, or official assignee or other assignee, at any time after the final order shall have been made, to give one month's notice to the petitioner, either by personal service, or, if he cannot be found, by service at the place of his residence mentioned in his notice of petition, that such creditor intends to apply by motion to the said commissioner, or, in case of his death, resignation, or removal, to the commissioner appointed to succeed him, that the final order be rescinded as far as relates to the protection of the petitioner's person from process, and as far as relates to the effect of such order in bar of suits and actions; and the said commissioner shall, upon hearing the matter of such motion, and any evidence in support of it, and what the petitioner has to allege against it, and any evidence against it, and upon examining the petitioner, if he shall desire to be examined or if the commissioner shall think fit, proceed to make such rescinding order as is hereinbefore mentioned, if he sees reason to believe that the petitioner had not before the making of the order sought to be rescinded made a full disclosure of his estate, effects, and debts, or had since the making of such order not given notice to the assignees of any property after acquired by him; provided that on any such motion by a creditor the official and other assignee shall be duly served with a month's notice to attend the said commissioner; and provided further, that notice of the hearing of such motion shall be given twice in the London Gazette and twice in the same paper in which notice of the petition had been given, or in some other paper circulating in the same county; and provided always, that the said commissioner, in case he shall refuse to make the rescinding order, shall, if he think fit, order the petitioner's costs of the motion to be paid by the creditor making the motion, or by the assignee chosen by the creditors, in case he shall make the motion, but not out of the petitioner's estate and effects.

13. That it shall be lawful for the judges and commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy, or any four of them, to make such orders, rules, and regulations as they shall think fit for the better carrying this act into execution, and particularly for regulating and appointing the duties of the official assignees and of the other assignees, the auditing of their accounts, the collecting the debts and the realizing the estate and effects of the petitioner, and the notification of the time of hearing petitions or motions in the Gazette or otherwise; which orders, rules, and regulations shall, upon being approved by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal, be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fourteen days from such approval, if parliament be then sitting, or if not, within fourteen days from the commencement of the next session of parliament, and shall in the meantime and from the date of such approval be binding upon the commissioners in the country, and upon all other persons whatever, until such time as either House of Parliament shall make some resolution in whole or in part disapproving the same.

14. That this act shall not come into operation before the 1st day of November next ensuing, except as regards the power of the commissioners to make orders, rules, and regulations, with consent of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal.

15. That this act may be altered or repealed by any act to be passed during the present session of parliament.

THE CRIMINAL LAW, and its SENTENCES IN TREASONS, FELONIES, and MISDEMEANORS.

By PETER BURKE, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law.

The principal Feature of this Work, which embraces an entire Codification of the Criminal Law, is, that the Sentence and the Authority for passing it are given at the Side of every Crime or Misdemeanor, without the Intervention of other Matter, so that the Offence and the Judgment may be had at one view by the Court or Legal Practitioner.

LONDON, OCTOBER 1, 1842.

The subject of costs in actions at law, simple as it may at first appear, has always been attended with some intricacy. And this appears to have been caused by the Legislature losing sight of the real principle upon which the recovery of the costs of a legal proceeding rests, and using the power of awarding costs for other than its legitimate purpose. The rules of equity and common sense undoubtedly require that the person who inflicts an injury upon another should make full compensation; and where, in order to obtain it, the injured party is obliged to incur any expense, that the compensation should include it. And it is therefore easily understood why the law of England very early provided, that an unsuccessful party in an action should pay his opponent's costs. So far the law rested on true grounds; but it soon being found that the payment of the costs was, in many instances, the most serious result of failing in an action, the idea seems to have suggested itself, that it might be used in some way to regulate litigation. In certain cases therefore, although the law would not go so far as to prohibit an injured party from seeking redress, yet, as it thought the injury of such a nature as not to call for its interposition, it discouraged any application to it by not giving the costs. On this principle the various acts of parliament were passed which have controlled the right to recover costs in actions for injuries of the nature of trespasses. The policy of such enactments is questionable; and, in fact, they have, partly perhaps by reason of the construction put upon them by the judges, become very clumsy contrivances for obtaining the desired end.

Another class of cases is those in which, when there are two modes of obtaining redress, the injured party selects the more expensive; and there the power of awarding costs has been very properly rendered subservient to the purpose of making the cheaper remedy to be adopted. Of this nature are the cases of county courts and courts of conscience, and the plaintiff who seeks the expensive tribunal has not the excuse that exists in the instances before alluded to, that no other door is open to him. In them he must altogether relinquish his claim,—in these he need only enforce it by another mode. The only objection therefore in the last class of cases is the want of uniformity arising from the numerous local acts, each perhaps containing a different provision.

Hitherto we have mentioned instances in which the right to seek redress for an injury has been interfered with as regards the costs only; and of the latter of them few will question the propriety. There are others, however, where, not only has the right to costs been made a sort of regulating valve, but various advantages have been given to one of the parties for the sole purpose of discouraging his opponent. Of this sort are the provisions in various acts of parliament, of both a public and private nature, relating to the recovery of double, treble, or other costs, pleading the general issue and giving any special matter in evidence under it, and giving notice of action. These are the guards with which the Legislature has surrounded certain favoured individuals called justices, constables, &c., who are supposed to be peculiarly liable to be oppressed by vexatious litigation. Whether this be so or not we will not stop to inquire. There are many probably who would say, that the oppression is more likely to proceed from, than be inflicted upon them, and that persons possessing the power of mischief which they do ought not to have any immunities beyond what the law gives to other individuals.

If, indeed, the giving double and treble costs was intended to check vexatious actions, the practice which prevailed with respect to the computation of them went far to nullify its operation. That was, as our readers are no doubt aware, not to give three times the taxed costs, but to add to them first a half and then a half of that, thus making what the law called treble costs fall short of what was actually double costs. But if this law of costs had for its purpose the imposing a sort of penalty upon a vexatious plaintiff, and giving to an official defendant some compensation for having an action brought against him, we must seek another reason for the privilege of being exempted from the ordinary rules of pleading. When the result of an action has shewn that it ought not to have been brought, it may be very well to punish the party bringing it; but to throw difficulties in the way of a plaintiff in the course of the proceedings may affect both the honest and dishonest, and can be justified only on the ground, that it is desirable to give a certain degree of immunity to persons in official situations. Before the New Rules, when the defence could generally be given in evidence under a plea of the general issue, this statutory privilege did not seem so inconsistent; but when the principle came to be fully recognised, that it was desirable that the real grounds of dispute between parties should be as much as possible disclosed by the pleadings, the anomaly was more apparent, and if it were to be continued it would be necessary to find some good reason for it.

The acts of parliament we have alluded to also required a notice to be given before commencing an action, and gave to the intended defendant a power of tendering amends for the alleged injury. Some uncertainty at first existed, and questions even now arise concerning the terms of such notices; and it has only recently been settled (Young v. Higgon, 6 Mee. & W. 49), contrary to previous cases, in what manner the time of giving it is to be computed; but these are evils of a slighter nature, and form no real objection to such a provision. It was to be regretted, however, that no fixed period had been at first adopted by the legislature; for scarcely two enactments were alike with respect to the time at which the notice was to be given before bringing the action. So much variety existed in this respect, that it was always necessary to consult the act itself in any particular case.

We have hitherto spoken of the law as it was until recently; we will now briefly allude to a change which has just been made.

With respect to the law of costs in actions of trespass and trespass upon the case, it is now some time since Lord Denman's Act, proceeding upon the original principle of such enactments, introduced a uniform rule concerning it. And the uncertainty also which arises from the various courts of requests acts will, probably ere the lapse of another session, be removed by the establishment throughout the country of Local Courts. But if that bill should again meet its oft-repeated fate, it would be desirable, at all events, that some uniform system should be adopted for the courts of conscience.

The preceding observations were, however, principally suggested by an act of last session intituled, "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Double Costs, Notices of Action, Limitations of Actions, and Pleas of the General Issue, under certain Acts of Parliament." By that, all provisions in public, or local and personal acts, giving double or treble or any other than usual costs between party and party, are repealed, and only the usual costs are henceforth to be recovered. The right to plead the general issue and give any special matter in evidence without specially pleading it, is also entirely taken away. And a uniform rule is introduced with respect to the notice by requiring it to be given one calendar month at least before bringing the action. The right to tender amends remains unaltered.

It is worthy of consideration whether it would be well in all actions for injuries of the nature of torts if not in those for breaches of contract, to require a notice of action to be given and allow a tender of amends. It is not to public officers alone that an opportunity of reparation ought to be afforded; and certain are we that many trifling actions of trespass and slander might be prevented by it; and as a defendant may now pay money into court in most actions of trespass and case, it would be but a slight step further to allow him to make and plead a tender. But as to tenders in actions against justices, it is to be observed that they differ from tenders of debts, pleas of which must be accompanied by payment into court of the sum tendered, which the plaintiff may take out, whether he admits or denies the tender, and it is essential also to the validity of such tenders that the party making them should always have been ready to pay the money. In the other cases the tender is, by the terms of the statute, to be pleaded in bar, and the refusal to accept the amends in case the jury find them to have been sufficient, is an answer to the action; nor can the plaintiff obtain them afterwards, which seems a rather unnecessary penalty. We think he ought to be allowed to have them, even after action brought, upon paying the costs of it. Another clause in the act of last session prescribes two years, or in case of continuing damage one year, as the period within which actions of the nature alluded to are to be brought, and thus, in this respect also, introduces a uniform period of limitation.

Such are the provisions of an act which, although it has attracted less notice in its way through parliament than some others, must be regarded as a decided improvement of the law; and having called the attention of our readers to it, we will only again remind them that the case of Young v. Higgon (6 Mee. & W. 49) introduces a new rule for computing the time of giving the notice of action, which should be carefully noted in connexion with the statute.

Reviews.

Supplement to the Third Edition of a Treatise on Copyhold, Customary Freehold, and Ancient Demesne Tenures, and on the Jurisdiction of Courts Baron and Courts Leet. By JOHN SCRIVEN, Esq., Serjeant at Law. [H. Butterworth, 1842.]

The object of a volume of this nature requires only that the decisions and enactments which have occurred since the publication of the principal work should be briefly and accurately stated. As the same arrangement must be followed, we do not look for any merit in that respect, nor does the nature of such works admit in general of any lengthened dissertations, which might display the ability of the author as a writer. In the present instance, indeed, that was unnecessary, the alents and learning of Serjeant Scriven being already well known. With respect to the work before us, although we cannot of course undertake to say that every decision has been noticed, we have no hesitation in pronouncing, that the author will be considered, to use his own words, to have redeemed the pledge given in his advertisement to the second volume of the third edition of his Treatise on Copyholds. The greater portion of a nature which does not admit of extracts, but the changes made in the law by the Enfranchisement Act have led to some observations, which are deserving of some particular notice—

"The principal feature of the first division of the late COMMUTATION and ENFRANCHISEMENT Act, 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, is the provision made for converting arbitrary fines on admission to copyhold and customary-hold lands, into fines certain and small, with a compensation to the lord of the manor, in reference to the reduced amount of the admission fines, and the extinction of quit-rents, rents of assize, &c., and of heriots, and of the lord's proprietary interest in timber, and any other manorial rights agreed to be commuted, by means of a yearly rent-charge, to be valued, and (when exceeding 20s.) to be variable according to the price of corn, as in the case of a tithe commutation rent-charge."

"The annexation of the proprietary interest of the lord of the manor in timber growing on copyhold or customary-hold lands, to the possessory interest therein of the tenant, was not the least important object of the first division of the late Commutation and Enfranchisement Act; and although the act has not varied the relative rights of lords and tenants in such timber, yet, as it has possessed the lords and tenants (such tenants not being less than three-fourths in number, and their interest not being less than three-fourths of the interest in the value of the land, estimated by the rule laid down in the 17th section, and the lord's interest not being less than three-fourths of the interest in the value of the manor), present at a meeting convened under the 13th section, to make an agreement for the general commutation of the lord's rights in 'rents,' 'fines,' and 'heriots,' and in 'timber,' to bind absent and non-consenting tenants, (such agreement being confirmed by the commissioners, see sect. 23), it is probable that a commutation of the lord's proprietary right in timber will, in most manors, be effected, and thereby the general improvement of the copyhold and customaryhold property be facilitated."

"In all cases where, previously to the above statute, an enfranchisement of copyholds or customaryholds could have been effected by lords of manors seized absolutely in fee, or by trustees under the usual powers contained in settlements and wills, the enfranchisement may now be accomplished under the powers of the act by persons seized of the manor for life, or other particular interest, only with the consent of the commissioners, and giving notice to the party entitled to the next estate of inheritance in remainder or reversion, or, if under the disability of infancy, coverture, lunacy, &c., then to his or her guardian, husband, committee, or trustee, when known or ascertained, and when not so, then to some person to be nominated for that purpose by the commissioners."

Before leaving the book, we cannot refrain from remarking, that we observed in more than one place some rather recommendatory remarks upon an Analysis of the Act, by John Scriven, Esq., Barrister at Law, which we think good taste would have suggested the propriety of omitting. As yet we have only spoken of the author's part of this work; but we feel bound to take the present opportunity of protesting against the manner in which it has been published. It adds another to the numerous instances of the extortion practised by some publishers. The profession has too much reason to complain of the high price which is in general charged for law books; and if ever there was a case in which good faith required that moderation should be shewn, it is in the publication of a supplement. The purchasers of the original work, perhaps at a high price, have been induced to become so partly by the expectation of a supplement, without which it is of small value; and nothing can be more unfair than to take advantage of their situation, and charge exorbitantly for it. Whoever looks at the present publication will be struck by its high price, and the studious manner with which a very wide margin and other arts of the printer are used to give a semblance of fairness. Acts of parliament which are in the hands of every person likely to make use of the work, are printed at length; and the Enfranchisement Act, already fully stated in the body of it, occupies fifty pages of the Appendix. We console ourselves, however, with the thought, that the evil of such a practice, which must discourage the purchase of books that are likely soon to require a supplement, will in the end cause its own cure. But it is, nevertheless, every body's duty and interest to set themselves steadily and earnestly against it.

CAP. CXXII.

An Act for the Amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy. — [12th August, 1842.]

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law of bankruptcy: And whereas by an act passed in the 1 & 2 Will. 4, [c. 56], intitled "An Act to establish a Court in Bankruptcy," various alterations were made in the administration of the law of bankruptcy, which have by experience been found beneficial, and it is advisable to extend the provisions and regulations contained in the said act; Be it therefore enacted &c., That the provisions of this act, unless where otherwise herein specially provided, shall commence and take effect from and after the 11th day of November next.

2. That all laws, statutes, and usages shall be and the same are hereby repealed, in so far as they may be inconsistent or at variance with the provisions of this act: Provided always, that the same shall continue in force in all other respects whatsoever.

3. That in every case of a petition for the issue of a fiat in bankruptcy, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to dispense, if he shall think fit, with the bond now required to be given to him by the petitioning creditor, conditioned for proving his debt, and for proving the party to have committed an act of bankruptcy at the time of issuing such fiat, and for proceeding upon such fiat; and in such case it shall be lawful to issue the fiat without any such bond having been given.

4. That every fiat in bankruptcy granted after the commencement of this act shall, after the granting of such fiat, be forthwith issued and transmitted by the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts, in such manner, and at such cost, as the Lord Chancellor by any general or other order shall direct, to the court to which such fiat shall be directed under and by virtue of the powers of any act now in force or of this act, and shall be forthwith opened, unless such court shall in its discretion think fit to postpone the opening of such fiat: Provided always, that if such fiat shall not be opened by the petitioning creditor within three days after it shall have been so transmitted, or within such extended time as shall be allowed by the said court, such court is hereby authorized to open such fiat, at any time within fourteen days then next following, upon the application of any other creditor to the amount required by this act to constitute a petitioning creditor, and to adjudicate thereon, upon the proof of the debt of such creditor, and of the other requisites to support such fiat; Provided always, that no such fiat shall be issued to the petitioning creditor, or his attorney or agent.

5. That whenever any fiat in bankruptcy shall have issued against any person, and it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat that there is probable cause for believing that such person is about to quit England, or to remove or conceal any of his goods or chattels, with intent to defraud his creditors, unless he be forthwith apprehended, it shall be lawful for such court to issue a warrant, directed to any person or persons such court shall think fit, whereby such person or persons shall have authority to arrest the person named in such fiat by his body, and also to seize his books, papers, monies, securities for monies, goods, and chattels, whosoever he or they may be found, and him and them safely keep until the expiration of the time allowed for opening such fiat, or until such person shall be adjudged bankrupt under such fiat, and be thereon dealt with under such fiat, according to the laws relating to bankrupts.

6. That it shall be lawful for any person arrested upon any such warrant, or for any person whose books, papers, monies, securities for monies, goods, or chattels have been seized under any such warrant, to apply at any time after such arrest or seizure to such court for an order or rule on the petitioning creditor named in such fiat to shew cause why the person arrested should not be discharged out of custody, or why his books, papers, monies, securities for monies, goods and chattels should not be delivered up to him; and that it shall be lawful for such court to make absolute or discharge such order or rule, and to direct the costs of the application to be paid by either party; provided that any such order may be discharged or varied by the Court of Review, on application made thereto by either party dissatisfied with such order.

7. That no person shall be liable to become bankrupt by reason of any act of bankruptcy committed more than twelve months prior to the issuing of any fiat in bankruptcy against him.

8. That no fiat in bankruptcy shall be deemed invalid by reason of any act of bankruptcy of the person against whom the adjudication of bankruptcy thereunder shall be made having been concerted or agreed upon between the bankrupt and any creditor or other person, save and except where any petition to supersede or annul a fiat for any such cause shall have been already presented, and shall be now pending.

9. That the amount of the debt or debts of any creditor or creditors petitioning for a fiat in bankruptcy shall hereafter be as follows; that is to say, the single debt of such creditor or of two or more persons being partners petitioning for the same shall amount to 50*l.* or upwards, and the debt of two creditors so petitioning shall amount to 70*l.* or upwards, and the debt of three or more creditors so petitioning shall amount to 100*l.* or upwards; and that every person who has given credit to any trader upon valuable consideration for any sum payable at certain time, which time shall not have arrived when such trader committed an act of bankruptcy, may so petition or join in petitioning as aforesaid, whether he shall have had any security in writing for such sum or not.

10. That all livery-stable keepers, coach-proprietors, carriers, ship-owners, auctioneers, apothecaries, market-gardeners, cow-keepers, brick-makers, alum-makers, lime-burners and millers shall be deemed traders, and subject and liable as traders to this and to the other statutes relating to bankrupts.

11. That if any creditor of any trader, within the meaning of this or any other statute relating to bankrupts now or hereafter to be in force, shall file an affidavit in the court authorized as hereinafter provided to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the district (to be described as hereinafter mentioned) in which such debtor shall reside, or in the Court of Bankruptcy, if such debtor shall not reside in any such district in the form specified in schedule hereunto annexed, (A. No. 1.) of the truth of his debt, and of the debtor, as he verily believes, being such trader as aforesaid, and of the delivery to such trader, personally, of an account in writing of the particulars of his demand, with a notice thereunder requiring immediate payment thereof, in the form specified in the said schedule (A. No. 2), it shall be lawful for the court in which such affidavit shall be filed, as the case may be, to issue a summons in writing, in the form specified in the said schedule, (A. No. 3) calling upon such trader to appear before such court, and stating in such summons the purpose for which such trader is called upon by such summons to appear as hereinafter provided.

12. That upon the appearance of any such trader so summoned as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such court to require such trader to state whether or not he admits the demand of such creditor so sworn to as aforesaid, or any and what part thereof, and if such trader shall admit such demand or any part thereof to reduce such admission into writing, in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed (B. No. 1), and such admission so reduced into writing such trader is hereby required to sign, and the same is thereupon to be filed in such court; and it shall also be lawful for such court to allow such trader upon his said appearance to make a deposition upon oath, in writing under his hand, to be filed in such court, in the form specified in the said schedule (B. No. 2), that he verily believes he has a good defence to the said demand, or to some and what part thereof.

13. That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid shall not come before such court at the time appointed (having no lawful impediment made known to and proved to the satisfaction of the court at the said time, and allowed), or if any such trader, upon his appearance to such summons as aforesaid, or at any enlargement or adjournment thereof, (as the case may be), shall refuse to admit such demand, and shall not make a deposition, in the form hereinbefore mentioned, that he believes he has a good defence to such demand, then and in either of the said cases, if such trader shall not, within fourteen days after personal service of such summons, or within such enlarged time as may be granted to him in that behalf, pay, secure, or compound for such demand to the satisfaction of such creditor, or enter into a bond, in such sum and with two sufficient sureties as such court shall approve of, to pay such sum as shall be recovered in any action which shall have been brought or shall thereafter be brought for the recovering of the same, together with such costs as shall be given in such action, every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the fifteenth day after service of such summons, provided a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against such trader within two months from the filing of such affidavit.

14. That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid upon his said appearance shall sign an admission of such demand in the form aforesaid, and shall not within fourteen days next after the filing of such admission pay, or tender and offer to pay, to such creditor the amount of such demand, or secure or compound for the same to the satisfaction of the creditor, every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the fifteenth day after the filing of such admission, provided a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against such trader within two months from the filing of such affidavit.

15. That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid shall upon his said appearance sign an admission for part only of such demand in the form aforesaid, and shall not make a deposition in the form hereinbefore required that he believes he has a good defence to the residue of such demand, then and in such case, if such trader, as to the sum so admitted, shall not, within fourteen days next after the filing of such admission, pay, or tender and offer to pay, to such creditor the sum so admitted, or secure or compound for the same to the satisfaction of the creditor, and as to the residue of such demand shall not, within fourteen days after personal service of such summons, or within such enlarged time as may be granted to him in that behalf, pay, secure, or compound for the same to the satisfaction of such creditor, or enter into a bond, in such sum and with two sufficient sureties as such court shall approve of, to pay such sum as shall be recovered in any action which shall have been brought or shall thereafter be brought for the recovery of the same, together with such costs as shall be given in such action, every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the fifteenth day after service of such summons, provided a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against such trader within two months from the filing of such affidavit.

16. That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid shall, upon his appearance before such court, refuse to sign the admission in that behalf required as aforesaid, whatever may be the nature of his statement, or whether he makes any statement or not, it shall be deemed, for the purposes of this act, that every such trader thereby refuses to admit such demand: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for such court, upon reasonable cause shewn, to enlarge the time for calling upon such trader to state whether or not he admits such demand, or any part thereof, and for entering into such bond, or for either of such matters, for such time as such court shall think fit.

17. That an admission of any debt made after such summons as aforesaid, and signed by any such trader elsewhere than before such court, may be filed in such court, and shall be of the same force and effect to all intents and purposes as an admission signed by such trader so summoned as aforesaid on his appearance in such court, provided there be present some attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of law on behalf of such trader, expressly named by him and attending at his request, to inform him of the effect of such admission before the same is signed by such trader; and provided also, that such attorney do subscribe his name thereto as a witness to the due execution thereof, and in such attestation declare himself to be attorney for the said trader, and state therein that he subscribes as such attorney, and that such admission shall be made in the form of Schedule (C.) hereunto annexed.

18. That where any trader against whom an affidavit of debt is filed as aforesaid shall be summoned to appear before the court in which such affidavit shall be filed, as the case may be, every such trader shall have such costs and charges as such court in its discretion shall think fit.

19. That in every action brought after the commencement of this act, wherein any such creditor is plaintiff and any such trader is defendant, and wherein the plaintiff shall not recover the amount of the sum for which he shall have filed an affidavit of debt under the provisions of this act, such defendant shall be entitled to costs of suit, to be taxed according to the custom of the court in which such action shall have been brought, provided that it shall be made appear to the satisfaction of the court in which such action is brought, upon motion to be made in court for that purpose, and upon hearing the parties by affidavit, that the plaintiff in such action had not any reasonable or probable cause for making such affidavit of debt in such amount as aforesaid, and provided such court shall thereupon, by a rule or order of the same court, direct that such costs shall be allowed to the defendant; and the plaintiff shall, upon such rule or order being made as aforesaid, be disabled from taking out any execution for the sum recovered in any such action, unless the same shall exceed, and then in such sum only as the same shall exceed, the amount of the taxed costs of the defendant in such action; and in case the sum recovered in any such action shall be less than the amount of the costs of the defendant to be taxed as aforesaid, that then the defendant shall be entitled, after deducting the sum of money recovered by the plaintiff in such action from the amount of his costs so to be taxed as aforesaid, to take out execution for such costs in like manner as a defendant may now by law have execution for costs in other cases.

20. That if any plaintiff shall recover judgment in any action personal for the recovery of any debt or money demand, in any of her Majesty's courts of record, against any such trader, and shall be in a situation to sue out execution upon such judgment, and there be nothing due from such plaintiff by way of set-off against such judgment, and such trader shall not, within fourteen days after notice in writing personally served upon him requiring immediate payment of such judgment debt, pay, secure, or compound for the same to the satisfaction of such plaintiff, he shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the fifteenth day after service of such notice: Provided always, that if such execution shall in the mean time be suspended or restrained by any rule, order, or proceeding of any court of justice having jurisdiction in that behalf, no further proceeding shall be had on such notice, but that it shall be lawful nevertheless for such plaintiff, when he shall again be in a situation to sue out execution on such judgment, to proceed again by notice in manner before directed.

21. That if any decree or order shall be pronounced in any cause depending in any court of equity, or any order shall be made in any matter of bankruptcy or lunacy, against any such trader, ordering such trader to pay any sum of money, and such trader shall disobey such decree or order, the same having been duly served upon him, the person entitled to receive such sum under such decree or order, or interested in enforcing the payment thereof pursuant thereto, may apply to the court by which the same shall have been pronounced to fix a peremptory day for the payment of such money, which shall accordingly be fixed by an order for that purpose; and if such trader, being personally served with such last-mentioned order fourteen days before the day therein appointed for payment of such money, shall neglect to pay the same, he shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the fifteenth day after the service of such order.

22. That if any such trader shall file in the office of the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts a declaration in writing (in the form of Schedule (D.) hereunto annexed), signed by such trader, and attested by an attorney or solicitor, that he is unable to meet his engagements, every such trader shall be deemed thereby to have committed an act of bankruptcy at the time of filing such declaration, provided a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against such trader within two months from the filing of such declaration: and a copy of such declaration, purporting to be certified by the said secretary or his clerk as a true copy, shall be received as evidence of such declaration having been filed.

23. That before notice of any adjudication of bankruptcy under any fiat in bankruptcy issued after the commencement of this act shall be given in the London Gazette, and at or before the time of putting in execution any warrant of seizure which shall have been granted upon such adjudication, a duplicate of such adjudication shall be served on the person so adjudged bankrupt personally, or by leaving the same at the usual place of abode or place of business of such person, and that such person shall be allowed five days from the service of such duplicate to shew cause to the court authorized to act in the prosecution of the fiat under which such adjudication shall have been made, against the validity of such adjudication; and that if such person shall within the time hereby allowed in that behalf shew to the satisfaction of such court that the petitioning creditor's debt, trading, and act of bankruptcy upon which such adjudication shall have been grounded, or that any or either of such matters, are insufficient to support such adjudication, and upon such shewing no other creditor's debt, trading, and act of bankruptcy sufficient to support such adjudication, or such of the said last-mentioned matters as shall be requisite to support such adjudication in lieu of the petitioning creditor's debt, trading, and act of bankruptcy, or any or either of such matters which shall be deemed insufficient in that behalf, as the case may be, shall be proved to the satisfaction of such court, such court shall thereupon cause a memorandum in writing to be filed with the proceedings under such fiat that such adjudication is annulled, and the same shall thereby be annulled accordingly; but if at the expiration of the said time no cause shall have been shewn to the satisfaction of such court for the annulling of such adjudication, such court shall forthwith, after the expiration of such time, cause notice of such adjudication to be given in the London Gazette, and shall thereby appoint two public sittings of such court for the bankruptcy to surrender and conform, the last of which sittings shall be on a day not less than thirty days and not exceeding sixty days from such advertisement, and shall be the day limited for such surrender: Provided always, that if such person so adjudged bankrupt shall, after such adjudication, and before the expiration of the time so allowed for shewing cause as aforesaid, surrender to such fiat, and give his consent, testified in writing under his hand before such court, to such adjudication, and that the same may be advertised, such court, after such consent so given as aforesaid, shall forthwith cause notice of such adjudication to be advertised, and appoint the sittings for the bankrupt to surrender and conform in manner aforesaid; and such person so adjudged bankrupt shall be free from arrest or imprisonment by any creditor in coming to surrender, and after such surrender during the time by this act limited for such surrender, and such further time as shall be allowed him for finishing his examination until his certificate be allowed and confirmed, as such court shall from time to time, by indorsement upon the summons of such bankrupt, think fit to appoint, provided he was not in custody at the time of such surrender; and if such bankrupt shall be arrested for debt, or on any escape warrant in coming to surrender, or shall after his surrender be so arrested within the time aforesaid, he shall, on producing his summons signed as required by this act to the officer who shall arrest him, and giving such officer a copy thereof, be immediately discharged; and if any officer shall detain any such bankrupt after he shall have shewn such summons to him, such officer shall forfeit to such bankrupt, for his own use, the sum of 5*l.* for every day he shall detain such bankrupt, to be recovered by action of debt in any court of record at Westminster, in the name of such bankrupt, with full costs of suit; and it shall be lawful for the court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat, at the time appointed for the last examination of the bankrupt, or any enlargement or adjournment thereof, to adjourn such examination sine die; and in such case he shall be free from arrest or imprisonment for such time not exceeding three months as such court shall from time to time by indorsement upon the summons of such bankrupt appoint, with like penalty upon any officer detaining such bankrupt after having been shewn such summons.

24. That if the bankrupt shall not, (if he were within the United Kingdom at the date of the adjudication), within twenty-one days after the advertisement of the bankruptcy in the London Gazette, or (if he were in any other part of Europe, at the date of the adjudication) within three months after such advertisement, or (if he were elsewhere at the date of the adjudication) within twelve months after such advertisement, have commenced an action, suit, or other proceeding to dispute or annul the fiat, and shall not have prosecuted the same with due diligence and with effect, the Gazette containing such advertisement shall be conclusive evidence in all cases as against such bankrupt, and in all actions at law or suits in equity brought by the assignees for any debt or demand for which such bankrupt might have sustained any action or suit had he not been adjudged bankrupt, that such person so adjudged bankrupt became a bankrupt before the date and suing forth of such fiat, and that such fiat was sued forth on the day on which the same is stated in the Gazette to bear date, saving all rights which shall have accrued to any such person as aforesaid previous to the commencement of this act, and in respect of which any proceedings shall be pending at the time of the commencement of this act, which shall be adjudged and determined as if this act had not been passed.

25. That in the event of the death of any witness deposing to the petitioning creditor's debt, trading, or act of bankruptcy, under any fiat in bankruptcy already issued or hereafter to be issued, the deposition of any such deceased witness, purporting to be sealed with the seal of the Court of Bankruptcy, or a copy thereof purporting to be so sealed, shall in all cases be receivable in evidence of the matters therein respectively contained.

26. That if the assignees commence any action or suit for any money due to the bankrupt's estate before the time allowed by this act for the bankrupt to dispute the fiat shall have elapsed, any defendant in any such action or suit shall be entitled, after notice given to the assignees, to pay the same or any part thereof into the court in which such action or suit is brought; and all proceedings with respect to the money so paid into court shall thereupon be stayed, until the time aforesaid shall have elapsed; and if within that time the bankrupt shall not have commenced such action, suit, or other proceeding as aforesaid, and prosecuted the same with due diligence the money shall be paid out of court to the assignees, be otherwise shall abide the event of such action, suit, or other proceeding as aforesaid, and upon such event shall be paid out of court, either to the assignees, or the person adjudged bankrupt, as the court shall direct, and that after such payment made into court, it shall not be lawful for the person so adjudged bankrupt to proceed against the defendant for recovery of the same money.

27. That it shall be lawful for the court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy, whenever such court shall think fit, at or after the sitting appointed for the last examination of the bankrupt named in such fiat, to audit the assignees' accounts, and to make a declaration of dividend under such fiat, subject nevertheless to such advertisement and such other provisions relating to such audits and dividends as are not required in respect to audits and dividends under bankrupt estates, except such provisions as relate to the limitation of time in any manner respecting such audits and dividends, or the appointment thereof.

28. That when any bankrupt under a fiat issued after the commencement of this act shall have been indebted at the time of issuing the fiat against him to any servant or clerk of such bankrupt in respect of the wages or salary of such servant or clerk, it shall be lawful for the court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat, upon proof thereof, to order so much as shall be so due as aforesaid, not exceeding three months' wages or salary, and not exceeding 30*l.*, to be paid to such servant or clerk out of the estate of such bankrupt, and such servant or clerk shall be at liberty to prove under the fiat for any sum exceeding such last-mentioned amount.

29. That when any bankrupt under a fiat issued after the commencement of this act shall have been indebted, at the time of issuing the fiat against him, to any labourer or workman of such bankrupt in respect of the wages or labour of such labourer or workman, it shall be lawful for the court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat, upon proof thereof, to order so much as shall be so due as aforesaid, not exceeding 40*l.*, to be paid to such labourer or workman out of the estate of such bankrupt, and such labourer or workman shall be at liberty to prove under the fiat for any sum exceeding such last-mentioned amount.

30. That in all cases where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy, that there is reason to suspect and believe that property of any bankrupt is concealed in any house, premises, or other place not belonging to such bankrupt, such court is hereby directed and authorized to grant a search-warrant to any person appointed by the court in which the adjudication against such bankrupt shall have been made, and it shall be lawful for such person to execute such warrant according to the tenor thereof; and such person shall be entitled to the same protection as is allowed by law in execution of a search-warrant for property reputed to be stolen or concealed.

31. That if any person adjudged bankrupt after the commencement of this act shall at the time of his bankruptcy be a member of a firm, it shall be lawful for the court authorized to act in the prosecution of the fiat against such bankrupt to authorize the assignees, upon his application, to commence or prosecute any action at law or suit in equity in the name of such assignee and of the remaining partner, against any debtor of the partnership, and such judgment, decree, or order may be obtained therein as if such action or suit had been instituted with the consent of such partner, and if such partner shall execute any release of the debt or demand for which such action or suit is instituted such release shall be void; provided that every such partner shall have notice given him of such application, and be at liberty to shew cause against it, and, if no benefit is claimed by him by virtue of the said proceedings, shall be indemnified against the payment of any costs in respect of such action or suit, in such manner as such court upon his application shall direct; and that it shall be lawful for such court, upon the application of such partner, to direct that he may receive so much of the proceeds of such action or suit as such court shall direct.

32. That if any person adjudged bankrupt after the commencement of this act shall not, upon the day limited for the surrender of such bankrupt, and before three of the clock of such day, or at the hour and upon the day allowed him for finishing his examination, after notice thereof in writing to be left at the usual or last-known place of abode or business of such person, or personal notice in case such person be then in prison, and notice given in the London Gazette of the issuing of the fiat, and of the sittings of the court authorized to act in the prosecution of the fiat against him, surrender himself to such court, and sign or subscribe such surrender, and submit to be examined before such court from time to time to time upon oath; or if any such bankrupt, upon such examination, shall not discover all his real and personal estate, and how, and to whom, upon what consideration, and when he disposed of, assigned, or transferred any of such estate, and all books, papers, and writings relating thereunto (except such part as shall have been really and bona fide before sold or disposed of in the way of his trade, or laid out in the ordinary expense of his family); or if any such bankrupt shall not upon such examination deliver up to the said court all such part of such estate, and all books, papers, and writings relating thereunto, as shall be in his possession, custody, or power (except the necessary wearing apparel of himself, his wife, and children); or if any such bankrupt shall remove, conceal, or embezzle any part of such estate to the value of 10*l.* or upwards, or any books of account, papers, or writings relating thereto, with intent to defraud his creditors; every such bankrupt shall be deemed guilty of felony, and be liable to be transported for life, or for such term, not less than seven years, as the court before which he shall be convicted shall adjudge, or shall be liable to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in any common gaol, penitentiary house, or house of correction, for any term not exceeding seven years.

33. That the court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy shall have power, as often as such court shall think fit, from time to time, to enlarge the time for the bankrupt named in such fiat surrendering himself for such time as such court shall think fit, so as every such order be made six days at least before the day on which such bankrupt was to surrender himself.

34. That if any bankrupt shall, after an act of bankruptcy committed, or in contemplation of bankruptcy, or with intent to defeat the object of this or any other statute relating to bankrupts, and after the commencement of this act, have destroyed, altered, mutilated, or falsified any of his books, papers, writings, or securities, or made or been privy to the making of any false or fraudulent entry in any book of account or other document, with intent to defraud his creditors, every such bankrupt shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be imprisoned in any common gaol or house of correction for any term not exceeding three years, with or without hard labour.

35. That if any bankrupt shall within three months next preceding his bankruptcy, and after the commencement of this act, under the false colour and pretence of carrying on business and dealing in the ordinary course of trade, have obtained on credit from any other person any goods or chattels with intent to defraud the owner thereof, or if any bankrupt shall within the time aforesaid, with such intent, have removed, concealed, or disposed of any goods or chattels so obtained, knowing them to have been so obtained, every such person so offending shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

36. That it shall be lawful for the court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy issued after the commencement of this act, upon the request in writing of at least three creditors (not being partners) who shall have respectively proved debts of the amount of 50*l.* or upwards under such fiat, to direct the assignees of the bankrupt named in such fiat, if he shall be suspected of or charged with the commission of any of the offences specified in this act, to institute and carry on a prosecution of such bankrupt for such offence, and to order that the costs and expenses to be incurred in such prosecution shall be paid out of the estate and effects of the said bankrupt, and such assignees shall thereupon institute and carry on such prosecution; and in case the said assignees shall refuse or neglect to institute and carry on to conviction such prosecution, having no lawful or reasonable impediment made known to and allowed by the said court, the said court may order the same to be instituted and carried on either by the official assignee alone, or by the creditors making such request as aforesaid, as the said court may think fit.

37. That every bankrupt who shall have duly surrendered and in all other things conformed himself to the laws in force at the time of issuing the fiat in bankruptcy against him shall be discharged from all debts due by him when he became bankrupt, and from all claims and demands made provable under the fiat, in case he shall obtain a certificate of such conformity so signed and allowed, and subject to such provisions as herein-after mentioned; and no certificate of such conformity by any such bankrupt shall release or discharge such bankrupt from such debts, claims, or demands, unless such certificate shall be obtained, allowed, and confirmed according to such provisions: Provided always, that no such certificate shall release or discharge any person who was partner with such bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy, or was then jointly bound or had made any joint contract with such bankrupt; and provided also, that nothing herein contained shall affect the validity of any certificate allowed by the Lord Chancellor or Court of Review previous to the commencement of this act.

38. That no bankrupt shall be entitled to the certificate under this act, and that any such certificate, if obtained, shall be void, if such bankrupt shall have lost by any sort of gaming or wagering in one day 20*l.*, or within one year next preceding his bankruptcy 200*l.*, or if he shall within one year next preceding his bankruptcy have lost 200*l.* by any contract for the purchase or sale of any government or other stock, where such contract was not to be performed within one week after the contract, or where the stock bought or sold was not actually transferred or delivered in pursuance of such contract; or if such bankrupt shall, after an act of bankruptcy, or in contemplation of bankruptcy, or with intent to defeat the object of this or any other statute relating to bankrupts, have concealed, destroyed, altered, mutilated, or falsified, or caused to be concealed, destroyed, altered, mutilated or falsified, any of his books, papers, writings, or securities, or made or been privy to the making any false or fraudulent entry in any book of account or other document, with intent to defraud his creditors, or shall have concealed any part of his property; or if any person having proved a false debt under the fiat, such bankrupt being privy thereto, or afterwards knowing the same, shall not have disclosed the same to his assignees within one month after such knowledge.

39. That it shall be lawful for the court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy already issued or hereafter to be issued, on the application of the bankrupt named in such fiat, to appoint a public sitting for the allowance of such certificate to the bankrupt named in such fiat; (whereof and of the purport whereof twenty-one days' notice shall be given in the London Gazette and to the solicitor of the assignees); and at such sitting any of the creditors of such bankrupt may be heard against the allowance of such certificate; but it shall not be requisite for such certificate to be signed by any of the creditors of such bankrupt; and such court, having regard to the conformity of the bankrupt to the laws relating to bankrupts, and to the conduct of the bankrupt as a trader before as well as after his bankruptcy, shall judge of any objection against allowing such certificate, and either find the bankrupt entitled thereto, and allow the same, or refuse or suspend the allowance thereof, or annex such conditions thereto as the justice of the case may require: Provided always, that no certificate shall be such discharge unless such court shall, in writing under hand and seal, certify to the Court of Review that such bankrupt has made a full discovery of his estate and effects, and in all things conformed as aforesaid, and that there does not appear any reason to doubt the truth or fulness of such discovery, and unless the bankrupt make oath in writing that such certificate was obtained fairly and without fraud, and unless the allowance of such certificate shall, after such oath, be confirmed by the Court of Review, against which confirmation any of the creditors of the bankrupt may be heard before such court.

40. That any contract or security made or given by any bankrupt or other person unto or in trust for any creditor, or for securing the payment of any money due by such bankrupt at his bankruptcy, as a consideration or with intent to persuade such creditor to forbear opposing or to consent to the allowance or confirmation of such certificate, shall be void, and the money thereby secured or agreed to be paid shall not be recoverable, and the party sued on such contract or security may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence.

41. That if any creditor of a bankrupt shall obtain any sum of money, or any goods, chattels, or security for money, from any person, as an inducement for forbearing to oppose or for consenting to the allowance or confirmation of the certificate of such bankrupt, every such creditor so offending shall forfeit and lose for every such offence the treble value or amount of such money, goods, chattels, or security so obtained, (as the case may be), to be recovered as hereinafter provided.

42. That any bankrupt who shall, after such certificate shall have been confirmed, be arrested, or have any action brought against him for any debt, claim, or demand provable under the fiat against such bankrupt, shall be discharged upon entering an appearance, and may plead in general that the cause of action accrued before he became bankrupt, and may give this act and the special matter in evidence; and such bankrupt's certificate, and the confirmation thereof, shall be sufficient evidence of the trading, bankruptcy, fiat, and other proceedings precedent to the obtaining such certificate; and if any such bankrupt shall be taken in execution or detained in prison for such debt, claim, or demand, where judgment has been obtained before the confirmation of his certificate, it shall be lawful for any judge of the court wherein judgment has been so obtained, on such bankrupt's producing his certificate, to order any officer who shall have such bankrupt in custody by virtue of such execution to discharge such bankrupt without exacting any fee, and such officer shall be hereby indemnified for so doing.

43. That no bankrupt, after such certificate shall have been confirmed, shall be liable to pay or satisfy any debt, claim, or demand, from which he shall have been discharged by virtue of such certificate, or any part of such debt, claim, or demand, upon any contract, promise, or agreement made or to be made after the suing out of the fiat, unless such contract, promise, or agreement be made in writing signed by the bankrupt, or by some person thereto lawfully authorized in writing by such bankrupt.

44. That every bankrupt who shall have obtained his certificate under any fiat issued after the commencement of this act, if the net produce of his estate in hand shall by any order of dividend (with or without prior dividend) pay the creditors who before or at the time of making such order have proved debts under the fiat 10s. in the pound, shall be allowed and paid 5l. per centum out of such produce, provided such allowance shall not exceed 500l.; and every such bankrupt, if such produce shall (with or without prior dividend) pay such creditors 12s. 6d. in the pound, shall be allowed and paid as aforesaid 7l. 10s. per centum, provided such allowance shall not exceed 500l.; and every such bankrupt, if such produce shall (with or without prior dividend) pay such creditors 15s. in the pound or upwards, shall be allowed and paid as aforesaid 10l. per centum, provided such allowance shall not exceed 600l.; and provided always, that such allowance as aforesaid shall not be payable to any bankrupt until after the expiration of twelve months from the date of the fiat, and such allowance shall then be payable only in the event of the dividends paid to the creditors who at any time before the expiration of such twelve months shall have proved debts under the fiat being of the requisite amount in that behalf aforesaid; and if at the expiration of such time the dividends paid as aforesaid shall not amount to 10s. in the pound, it shall be lawful for the court to allow such bankrupt so much as the assignees and court shall think fit, not exceeding 300l. per centum and 300l.

45. That, in all joint fiats under which any partner shall have obtained his certificate, if a sufficient dividend shall have been paid upon the joint estate, and upon the separate estate of such partner, he shall be entitled to his allowance although his other partner may not be entitled to any allowance.

46. And whereas fiats in bankruptcy against traders residing within a limited distance from London are usually exclusively directed to the Court of Bankruptcy, and such distance may, in consequence of the increased facility of communication, be without inconvenience considerably extended; and it is expedient to make better provision for the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy not directed to the Court of Bankruptcy; be it enacted, That every fiat in bankruptcy issued after the commencement of this act, not directed to the Court of Bankruptcy, shall be directed to such one of the courts authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country, as hereinafter provided, as the Lord Chancellor, or as the Master of the Rolls, one of the Vice-Chancellors, or one of the Masters of the Court of Chancery acting under any appointment of the Lord Chancellor to be given for that purpose, by such fiat may think fit to nominate, to be prosecuted in such court, and that every such fiat shall be thereupon prosecuted in the court to which the same shall be so directed, and it shall be lawful for such court to proceed thereon in all respects as commissioners of bankrupt acting in the prosecution of a fiat in bankruptcy elsewhere than in the Court of Bankruptcy before the passing of this act, save and except as such proceeding may be altered by virtue of this act; and that in every bankruptcy prosecuted in any such court every such court shall have all the power, jurisdiction, and authority, and be subject to the duty, by any act of parliament now in force vested in or imposed upon such commissioners, in all respects as if such court were commissioners of bankrupt returned and appointed under the said recited act, save and except as may be otherwise directed by this act.

47. That every fiat in bankruptcy prosecuted in the country, and the proceedings under such fiat, or any part of such proceedings, or copies or minutes of every such fiat and proceedings, or part thereof, at such time and in such manner and form as the Lord Chancellor shall direct, shall be transmitted by the court acting in the prosecution of such fiat to the Court of Bankruptcy in London, to be there filed and kept among the records of the said court.

48. That a number of persons, not exceeding thirty in the whole, being merchants, brokers, or accountants, or persons who are or have been engaged in trade in the United Kingdom, shall be chosen by the Lord Chancellor to act as official assignees in all bankruptcies prosecuted in the country, one of which said official assignees shall in all cases be an assignee of each bankrupt's estate and effects, together with the assignee or assignees to be chosen by the creditors, such official assignee to give such security, to be subject to such rules, to be selected for such estate, and to act in such manner, as the Lord Chancellor, or as the Court of Review or Judge or any commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy, if authorized so to do by any order of the Lord Chancellor, shall from time to time direct; and all the personal estate and effects, and the rents and profits of the real estate, and the proceeds of sale of all the estate and effects, real and personal, of every bankrupt, shall in every case be possessed and received by the official assignee alone, save where it shall be otherwise directed by the Lord Chancellor or by the court acting in the prosecution of the bankruptcy, if authorized so to do by any general or other order of the Lord Chancellor, and whether such official assignee be appointed under the provisions of the said recited act or of this act; and all stock in the public funds or of any public company, and all monies, exchequer bills, India bonds, or other public securities, and all bills, notes, and other negotiable instruments, shall be forthwith transferred, delivered, and paid by such official assignee into the Bank of England, to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, to be subject to such order, rule, and regulation for the keeping of the account of the said monies and other effects, and for the payment and delivery in, investment, and payment and delivery out of the same, as the Lord Chancellor, or as the Court of Review or Judge or commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, if authorized so to do by any order of the Lord Chancellor, shall direct; and if any such assignee shall neglect to make such transfer, delivery, or payment, every such assignee shall be liable to be charged in the same manner as is provided in cases of neglect by assignees to invest money in the purchase of exchequer bills when directed so to do: Provided always that, until assignees shall be chosen by the creditors of each bankrupt, such official assignee so to be appointed to act with the assignees to be chosen by the creditors shall be enabled to act, and shall be deemed to be, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, a sole assignee of each bankrupt's estate and effects.

49. That nothing herein contained shall extend to authorize any such official assignee to interfere with the assignees chosen by the creditors in the appointment or removal of a solicitor or attorney, or in directing the time and manner of effecting any sale of the bankrupt's estate or estates.

50. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to remove any official assignee whether appointed under the provisions of the said recited act or of this act, and from time to time, as any vacancy may occur in the said before-mentioned number of official assignees, to appoint some other such person as aforesaid to fill any vacancy so occurring; and in case of the death or removal of any such official assignee who shall have been appointed to act in any bankruptcy it shall be lawful for the court authorized to act in the prosecution of such bankruptcy to appoint another official assignee of the number hereby prescribed to act (subject as aforesaid) in the same bankruptcy in the place of the assignee who shall have so become dead or been removed.

51. That every official assignee of any bankrupt's estate appointed under the provisions of this act shall have all the same rights, powers, privileges, and exemptions as are possessed by official assignees appointed under the said recited act and the enactments therein contained in that behalf, and, in relation to the evidence of the appointment of bankrupts' assignees, shall extend and be applied to official assignees to be appointed under this act, except as otherwise directed by this act; and that every official assignee, whether appointed under the provisions of the said recited act or of this act, shall be entitled to be paid out of the bankrupt's estate, by way of remuneration for his services, such sum of money as to the court named in and acting under the fiat in prosecution against such bankrupt may seem just and reasonable, having regard to the amount of the bankrupt's property, and the nature of the duties to be performed by such official assignee, subject, nevertheless, to such general or special orders in relation thereto as may from time to time be made by the Lord Chancellor in that behalf.

52. That all power, jurisdiction, and authority of the commissioners named in any fiat of bankruptcy issued before the commencement of this act, to be prosecuted elsewhere than in the city of London, shall cease and determine; and that the Lord Chancellor shall have power from time to time, by any general or other order or orders under his hand, to transfer and remove into the Court of Bankruptcy, or such of the courts authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy by virtue of this act, as he may deem fit, any such fiat, and that all further proceedings in every such fiat shall be thenceforth prosecuted and carried on in the court to which the same shall be so transferred, in like manner as if the proceedings under such fiat had been originally commenced therein by virtue of a fiat under the hand of the Lord Chancellor issued pursuant to the said recited act, or to this act, save as may be otherwise directed by this act; provided always, that nothing herein contained shall render invalid any proceedings which may have been had under any fiat in bankruptcy now subsisting, or which shall have been issued before this act shall come into operation, or affect or lessen any right, claim, demand, or remedy which any person now has thereunder, or upon or against any bankrupt against whom any such fiat has or shall have issued as aforesaid, except as herein specially enacted.

53. That it shall be lawful for the court which shall thenceforth act in the prosecution of such fiat, at its discretion, to appoint some one of the official assignees appointed or to be appointed under the said recited act or this act to act with the existing assignees, if any, under such fiat, and to direct the existing assignees to pay and deliver over to such official assignee all monies, books, papers, and effects whatsoever in their possession or custody as such assignees, save where it shall be otherwise directed by the Lord Chancellor or by the court acting in the prosecution of such fiat, if authorized so to do by any general or other order of the Lord Chancellor; and all the real and personal estate of the bankrupt under such fiat shall immediately on such appointment vest in such official assignee jointly with the existing assignees, if any, in like manner as if the proceedings in the said bankruptcy had originally been commenced by virtue of this act, without prejudice to any action or suit commenced or any contract entered into by the existing assignees at the time of the passing of this act.

54. That no official assignee shall be deemed personally responsible or liable for any act done by him or by his order or authority in the execution of his duty as such official assignee, by reason of the petitioning creditor's debt, trading, and act of bankruptcy upon which the adjudication of bankruptcy under such fiat shall have been grounded, or of any other or either of such matters, being insufficient to support such adjudication.

55. That, fourteen days before a final dividend shall be advertised under any bankrupt's estate, there shall be sent by the official assignee to each creditor's assignee of such estate a debtor and creditor account between the official assignee and such estate, shewing also the monies remaining uncollected under such estate, and the cause of such monies remaining uncollected, a copy of which account shall be delivered to any creditor who shall apply for the same and have proved or claimed a debt under such fiat, upon his applying for the same to the official assignee, and to any other person, such person, not being a creditor, paying such sum, not exceeding 2s. 6d., as shall be settled by the court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat.

56. That there shall be paid, in like manner, by the official assignee of each bankrupt's estate to be administered in the country, the like sums as by the said recited act are directed to be paid by the official assignee of each bankrupt's estate to be administered in the Court of Bankruptcy; and such sums hereby directed to be paid shall be placed by the accountant in bankruptcy to the like accounts respectively, and be subject to the like orders and directions of the Lord Chancellor, to which the said sums mentioned in the said recited act are thereby directed to be placed and to be subject respectively.

57. That in all cases of fiats in bankruptcy which, by virtue of the provisions herein contained, shall be removed into the Court of Bankruptcy, or into any of the courts authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy by virtue of this act, and under which the choice of assignees shall have taken place prior to the commencement of this act, there shall be paid, in like manner, by the assignees of every such bankrupt's estate, on every sitting under such bankruptcy, the like sum as by the said recited act is directed to be paid on every sitting in cases of commissions of bankrupt which by virtue of the powers therein contained should be removed into the said Court of Bankruptcy, and under which the choice of assignees should have taken place prior to the commencement of the said act; and such sum hereby directed to be paid shall be placed by the said accountant in bankruptcy to the like account, and be subject to the like orders and restrictions, to which the said sum in that behalf mentioned in the said recited act is thereby directed to be placed and to be subject.

58. And whereas the duties of the several persons now acting as commissioners of bankrupt in districts and places for which such persons shall have been returned and appointed under the provisions of the said recited act, and the fees and emoluments accustomed to be received by them, will be abolished by the provisions of this act, and it may be just and necessary that in some such cases compensation should be made in respect of such fees so to be abolished; be it enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, by examination on oath or otherwise, which oath they and each of them are and is hereby authorized to administer, to inquire into and ascertain the annual amount of the lawful fees and emoluments of such commissioners received by them, and to award to such one or more of the said commissioners as they shall deem to be entitled to the same an annuity or annuities, of such amount and for such term as the said Lords of the Treasury shall find to be a fair and reasonable compensation for the loss to be sustained by such of the said commissioners, and shall certify the amount of such annuity, in writing under their hands, to the Lord Chancellor, who shall thereupon have power to order the amount so certified as payable to each such commissioner to be paid out of the monies standing to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy in the Bank of England, to the account intitled "The Secretary of Bankrupt's Compensation Account," (but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and sums of money by any act or acts now in force authorized to be paid thereout), and the same shall be payable and paid accordingly to such respective persons aforesaid, without any deduction whatsoever: Provided always, that the annual sum to be so payable to any commissioner shall not exceed two thirds of the average annual amount of the sums (other than any sum or sums for travelling) received by them respectively as such commissioners for the last five years, or such portion of that period as any of them acted as a commissioner, and that such annuity shall not be paid to any commissioner who at any time after the commencement of this act shall be appointed to hold any public office or employment of an annual value greater than the annuity to be so certified as payable to him, so long as any such office or employment shall be so held; and provided also, that no person shall be entitled to such compensation or allowance as aforesaid whose appointment to his office was qualified by any condition or reservation expressed in his appointment, or otherwise made known to such person, that such office or the emoluments thereof were to be held and enjoyed subject to any future provisions to be made by parliament touching the same, or without any claim to compensation in case the same should cease, or be subjected to any regulation.

59. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty, after the passing of this act, by a commission or commissions under the Great Seal, to appoint as many persons as her Majesty shall think fit, not exceeding twelve persons, being sergeants or barristers at law of not less than seven years' standing at the bar, to be commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy, in addition to the present commissioners of the said court, to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country, and that they and their successors shall take the like oath before the Lord Chancellor as is at present administered to commissioners of the said court, and having once taken the said oath shall not be again required to take the same; and that any one or more of such additional commissioners shall and may form a district Court of Bankruptcy for the purpose of this act, and that every such court shall be authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country, at such place and in and for such district as her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, shall be pleased to direct; and that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, to describe, and from time to time to alter, the limit and extent of every such district as to her Majesty shall seem fit: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent the Lord Chancellor, when he shall deem it expedient, from directing any fiat in bankruptcy to the Court of Bankruptcy.

60. That upon the death, resignation, or removal from office of any of the said additional commissioners, or of any of their successors, it shall be lawful for her Majesty from time to time, by a commission under the Great Seal, to supply such vacancy.

61. That it shall be lawful for her Majesty, after the passing of this act, under her royal sign manual, from time to time to appoint any number not exceeding twelve deputy registrars, in addition to the present deputy registrars in the Court of Bankruptcy, to act as such in the country, and to attend upon and assist the said additional commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country, in such manner as may be found most expedient for furthering such business, and as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time by any order direct.

62. That the additional commissioners and deputy registrars to be appointed under this act shall hold their respective offices during their good behaviour, and that they shall be subject and liable to such and the like privileges, prohibitions, disabilities, prosecutions, penalties, and punishments as are by the said recited act imposed or directed with respect to the commissioners and deputy registrars appointed under such act, and the enactments therein contained in that behalf, except as otherwise directed by this act, shall extend and be applicable to the additional commissioners and deputy registrars to be appointed under this act; and that after the passing of this act, on the death, resignation, promotion, or removal of either of the two registrars for the time being of the Court of Bankruptcy, the vacancy thereby occasioned shall be filled up by such one of the deputy registrars for the time being appointed or to be appointed by virtue of the said recited act or of this act, as the Lord Chancellor shall think fit to appoint.

63. That the accountant in bankruptcy, the registrar and deputy registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy, and also the official assignees and the messengers and ushers of the said court for the time being, shall be exempt and disqualified from being returned and from serving on any juries or inquests whatsoever, and shall not be inserted in any lists of men qualified or liable to serve as jurors, and that they shall also be exempt and disqualified from serving any parochial office whatsoever.

64. That from and after the passing of this act the Court of Review in bankruptcy may be formed by one judge of the said court.

65. That the judges of the Court of Review in bankruptcy shall take rank and precedence next after the Judges of the superior courts of Westminster Hall.

66. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any general or other order, whenever he shall think fit, to direct the court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy to hear, determine, and make order in any matter in bankruptcy heretofore within the original jurisdiction of the Court of Review, or any judge of the said court; provided nevertheless, that any such order shall be subject to be discharged, reversed, or altered by the Court of Review upon an appeal, and that any commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat directed to the Court of Bankruptcy shall be deemed and taken to be a court autho-ized to act in the prosecution of such fiat, and that all matters and duties by this act directed or authorized to be done and performed by the Court of Bankruptcy shall and may be done and performed by any one or more of the commissioners appointed or to be appointed by virtue of the said recited act, and that every court authorized to act and acting in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy now issued, or hereafter to be issued, or in execution of any duty imposed or to be imposed on such court by this or any other act hereafter to be in force, shall have, use, and exercise all the powers, rights, privileges, and incidents of a court of record.

67. That all affidavits to be made or used in matters of bankruptcy, or under or by virtue of any statute relating to bankrupts or of this act, shall and may be sworn before the Court of Review, or before either of the subdivision courts in bankruptcy, or any commissioner, or the master, or any registrar or deputy registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy, or master in ordinary or extraordinary of the High Court of Chancery, or in Scotland or Ireland before a magistrate of the county, city, town, or place where any such affidavit shall be sworn, or elsewhere before a magistrate, and attested by a notary, or before a British minister, consular, or vice-consul.

68. That it shall be lawful for the said several subdivision courts, and the court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy, in all matters within the jurisdiction of such respective courts, to take the whole or any part of the evidence either viva voce on oath, or upon affidavits to be sworn as aforesaid.

69. That it shall be lawful for the said several subdivision courts, and the court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy, in all matters before such courts respectively, to award such costs as to such courts shall seem fit and just; and in all cases in which costs shall be so awarded against any person by any such court, it shall and may be lawful for such court to cause such costs to be recovered from such person in the same manner as costs awarded by a rule of any of the superior courts at Westminster may be recovered; and that the like remedies may be had upon an order of such court for costs as upon a rule of any of the said superior courts for costs.

70. That it shall be lawful for the commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in London, or the major part of them, and such of the commissioners to be appointed under this act as shall be nominated by the Lord Chancellor for that purpose, to make from time to time, subject to the sanction and confirmation of the Lord Chancellor, general rules and orders for regulating the forms of proceedings (where not provided for by this act) and the practice to be observed in every court authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy.

71. That the piece or parcel of ground described in and conveyed by the indenture of feoffment recited in an act made and passed in the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, [c. 115.] intitled "An Act to repeal so much of an Act of the fifth Year of the Reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, relating to Bankrupts, as requires the Writings under Commissions of Bankrupt to be holden in the Guildhall of the City of London, and for Building Offices in the said City for the Meetings of the Commissioners, and for the more regular Transaction of Business in Bankruptcy," or expressed so to be, and all erections and buildings now or hereafter to be erected and built thereon, and the fee-simple and inheritance thereof, shall from henceforth be and become and remain and continue vested in her Majesty's commissioners for the time being of the Court of Bankruptcy acting in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in London, and their successors, as commissioners of the said court, in trust for her Majesty, for the same intent and purpose as by the said act is enacted and declared concerning the commissioners and trustees thereby nominated; and the persons or persons now being commissioners and trustees by virtue of the said act shall continue to be such commissioners or trustees; and the said commissioners for the time being of the said court, and their successors, shall and may in all things act in the further management, carrying on, and execution of the purposes and trusts of the said act, and with the like power and authority, to all intents and purposes, as is given by the said act to the commissioners and trustees therein named; and the clauses and provisions in the said act applicable to the commissioners and trustees therein named shall extend and be applicable to the said commissioners for the time being of the said court, in the further execution of the purposes and trusts of the said act.

72. That the building erected on the said piece or parcel of ground shall, from and after the passing of this act, be called the Court of Bankruptcy.

73. That the registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy for the time being acting at the said court in Basinghall-street shall keep books in which he shall enter, in a form to be prepared by him, subject to the sanction of the commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy acting in the city of London as aforesaid, or the major part of them, and approved of by the Lord Chancellor, an abstract of the proceedings filed in the Court of Bankruptcy, or such part thereof as shall be necessary to give a correct view of the estate to which such proceedings shall relate, and the management thereof, with an alphabetical index to each book, and a general alphabetical index to the whole of such books, which books shall be open to all concerned.

74. That as to when any vacancy may occur by the death, removal, or retirement of the clerk of inrolments to the Court of Bankruptcy, such vacancy shall not be supplied, but the duties and business of such officer shall thenceforth be performed by the registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy acting in Basinghall-street as aforesaid, who shall, with respect to such duties and business, stand and be in the place of such officer to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

75. That all such fees as are receivable by virtue of an act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, [c. 114, s. 6], intitled, "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Bankrupts," and directed to be applied as therein mentioned, shall, from and after the death, removal, or retirement of the said clerk of inrolments, be received by the said registrar for the time being acting in Basinghall-street as aforesaid, and be paid by him, at such times as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order direct, into the Bank of England, to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, to the account intitled "The Secretary of Bankrupts' Account," and shall be applicable to all the purposes of the said account, and be subject to the like orders as other monies paid or directed to be paid into the said account.

76. That, out of the fund placed to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, intitled "The Secretary of Bankrupts' Account," there shall be paid by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by virtue of any order or orders of the Lord Chancellor to be from time to time made for that purpose without any draft from the accountant in bankruptcy, the several salaries hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, the net yearly sum of 2500*l.* to Sir John Cross, Knight, Judge of the Court of Bankruptcy, and his successors in the office of such judge; the net yearly sum of 2000*l.* to each commissioner of the said court appointed under the said recited act, and acting in the prosecution of flats in bankruptcy, in the city of London, and his successors in the office of such commissioner; the net yearly sum of 1800*l.* to each commissioner of the said court to be appointed under this act to act in the prosecution of flats in bankruptcy in the country, and his successors in the office of such commissioner; the net yearly sum of 1000*l.* to each registrar of the said court appointed under the said recited act, and his successors in such office; the net yearly sum of 800*l.* to each deputy registrar of the said court appointed under the said recited act, and acting as such in the city of London, and his successors in such office; and the net yearly sum of 600*l.* to each deputy registrar of the said court to be appointed under this act to act as such in the country, and his successors in such office; which salaries shall be free from all taxes, deductions, and abatements whatsoever out of the same, or any part thereof, except the tax on income, and shall be paid quarterly, on the 11th January, the 11th April, the 11th July, and the 11th October in every year, by equal portions; and the first of such payments to the said judge and each commissioner, registrar, and deputy registrar, acting in London as aforesaid, or a proportionate part thereof, to be computed from the time of the passing of this act, or, as to any such officer appointed after the passing of this act, from the time of his appointment, shall be made on such of the same days of payment as shall first happen after the passing of this act, or date of the appointment of such officer, as the case may be; and the first of such payments to each commissioner and deputy registrar to be appointed under this act to act in the country as aforesaid, or a proportionate part thereof, to be computed from the time of the appointment of each commissioner and deputy registrar respectively, shall be made on such of the same days of payment as shall first happen after the date of such appointment; and that upon the resignation, death, or removal from office of any such judge, commissioner, registrar, or deputy registrar respectively, such judge, commissioner, registrar, and deputy registrar respectively, or their respective executors and administrators, as the case may be, shall be paid such proportionate part of their respective salaries aforesaid as shall have accrued from the times of the commencement of such salaries respectively, or from the last quarterly day of payment thereof to the time of such resignation, death, or removal from office; and that the succeeding judge, commissioner, registrar, and deputy registrar respectively shall be paid such proportionate part of their respective salaries as shall be accruing or shall accrue from the day of the resignation, death, or removal from office of the preceding judge, commissioner, registrar, or deputy registrar respectively.

77. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order or orders of the Lord Chancellor to be made from time to time on a petition presented to him for that purpose, to order (if he shall so think fit) to be paid out of the interest and dividends that have arisen or may arise from the securities now or hereafter to be placed in the Bank of England to the account intitled "The Bankruptcy Fund Account," (but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and sums of money by any act or acts now in force directed or authorized to be paid thereout), the annuities following; that is to say, an annuity or clear yearly sum of money not exceeding 1500*l.* to Sir John Cross, Knight, Judge of the Court of Bankruptcy, or any of his successors in the office of such judge; an annuity or clear yearly sum of money not exceeding 1200*l.* to any commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy appointed under the said recited act, or any of his successors in the office of such commissioner; an annuity or clear yearly sum of money not exceeding 1000*l.* to any commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy to be appointed under this act, or any of his successors in the office of such commissioner, if and when any such judge or commissioner shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, and shall be desirous of resigning the same; and the annuity or clear yearly sum mentioned in any such order shall be paid by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England out of the interest and dividends of the said securities (but subject and without prejudice as aforesaid) by equal quarterly payments on the 5th January, the 5th April, the 5th July, and the 10th October in every year, to such judge or commissioner from the period when he shall resign his said office, for the term of his life, free from taxes, except the tax on income.

78. That out of the interest and dividends that have arisen or may arise from the government or parliamentary securities now or hereafter to be placed in the Bank of England to the said account intitled, "The Bankruptcy Fund Account," there shall be paid by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by virtue of any order or orders of the Lord Chancellor, to be made from time to time for that purpose, the salaries and sums following: that is to say, to the accountant in bankruptcy, such sum by way of salary as the Lord Chancellor shall direct, not exceeding the yearly sum of 1500*l.*, to be paid and payable in like manner and at such times as the salary heretofore payable to the accountant in bankruptcy, and such further annual sum as the Lord Chancellor shall think reasonable for the payment of such salaries as the Lord Chancellor shall direct to the clerks for the time now being, and their successors, and to such additional clerks to such accountant or to the registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy acting at the said Court in Basinghall-street, as the Lord Chancellor shall deem fit to appoint; and authority is hereby given to the Lord Chancellor to appoint such clerks, and to reduce or increase the number of clerks to the said accountant or registrar, as occasion may be or require, the same salaries to be paid quarterly on such days and in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order in that behalf direct; and also, to such persons as the Lord Chancellor shall direct, such sum or sums of money as the Lord Chancellor shall think reasonable, for expenses to be incurred at any time after the passing of this act, with the sanction and approval of the Lord Chancellor, in providing and keeping in repair courts in the country with necessary appurtenances for the purposes of this act, or in alterations or improvements of the offices of the said accountant and of the registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy, or any other of the offices of the same court, for the purpose of rendering the same fit for the convenient reception and despatch of the business of such offices, and for the convenient occupation of the offices of the said court, and for the supply of law books for the use of the said court, or generally for such expenses in carrying this act into effect as the Lord Chancellor may think fit; and also such annual sum or sums of money as the Lord Chancellor shall think reasonable for the rent of any buildings or rooms which by any order of the Lord Chancellor may be taken for any officers of the said court, or otherwise for the use of the said court, and for keeping up a necessary supply of books for the use of the said court; and the several courts which shall be provided by virtue of this act, with the appurtenances and effects belonging thereto, shall vest in the respective commissioners to be appointed under this act for the time being, forming such respective courts, and their successors in such office, in trust for the purposes of this act; and there shall be charged to and paid out of the estate of the bankrupt under every fiat prosecuted in the country, for every sitting under such fiat, the sum of 10s., by way of charge for the use of the court, such charge to be received and accounted for and paid into the Bank of England to the account intitled "Interest arising from the Bankruptcy Fund Account," at such time and in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time direct, and such charge to be subject to abolition or reduction as the Lord Chancellor may in his discretion think fit, having regard from time to time to the amount of the interest and dividends arising from the bankruptcy fund account, and the charges thereupon.

79. That every warrant issued by any court authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy shall be under the hand and seal of one of the commissioners acting in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in such court; and every summons issued by any such court shall be in writing under the hand of one of such commissioners.

80. That if in any case it shall be shewn by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy, by which a summons shall have been issued, that the party to whom such summons is directed is keeping out of the way, and cannot be personally served with such summons, and that due pains have been taken to effect such personal service, it shall be lawful for the court by which such summons shall have been issued to order, by endorsement upon such summons, that the delivery of a copy of such summons to the wife, or servant, or some adult inmate of the house or family of the party, at his usual or last known place of abode or business, and explaining the purport thereof to such wife, servant, or inmate, shall be equivalent to personal service, and in every such case the service of such summons in pursuance of such order shall be and be deemed and taken to be of the same force and effect, to all intents and purposes, as if a copy of such summons had been delivered to the party in person.

81. That any bankrupt or other person who shall, upon any examination upon oath or affirmation before the court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy, or in any affidavit, or deposition, or solemn affirmation, authorized or directed by this or any other act relating to bankrupts, wilfully and corruptly give false evidence, or wilfully and corruptly swear or affirm anything which shall be false, being convicted thereof, shall be liable to the penalties of wilful and corrupt perjury.

82. That all sums of money forfeited under this act, or by virtue of any conviction for perjury committed in any oath hereby directed or authorized, may be sued for by the assignees of the estate and effects of any bankrupt in any of her Majesty's superior courts of record, and the money so recovered (the charges of suit being deducted) shall be divided among the creditors.

83. That all bills of charges, fees, and disbursements of any auctioneer, appraiser, broker, valuer, or accountant employed by any assignee or messenger or bankrupt under any fiat in bankruptcy, for business done under such employment, shall be settled by the court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat, and the amount of the bills so settled, and no more, shall be paid to or recoverable by such auctioneer, appraiser, broker, valuer, or accountant.

84. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order or orders of the Lord Chancellor, to be made from time to time on a petition presented to him for that purpose, to order (if he shall think fit) an annuity or clear yearly sum of money to be paid to any person executing the office of accountant in bankruptcy, or of registrar or deputy registrar under the said recited act or this act, not exceeding two third parts of the yearly salary which such person shall under this act be entitled to at the time of presenting such petition, to be paid out of the interest and dividends that have arisen or may arise from the securities now or hereafter to be placed in the Bank of England to the account intitled "The Bankruptcy Fund Account," (but subject and without prejudice as aforesaid), if and when such person shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, and shall be desirous of resigning the same; and the annuity or yearly sum mentioned in such order or orders shall be paid by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, out of the interest and dividends of the said securities, (but subject and without prejudice as aforesaid), by equal quarterly payments, on the 5th January, the 5th April, the 5th July, and the 10th October in every year, to such person from the period when he shall resign his said office, for the term of his life, free from taxes, except the tax on income.

85. That the several courts authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy by the said recited act or by this act shall be auxiliary to each other for proof of debts, and for the examination of witnesses on oath, or for either of such purposes; and the court so acting as auxiliary in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy in the examination of witnesses shall possess the same powers to compel the attendance of and to examine witnesses, and to enforce both obedience to such examination and the production of books, deeds, papers, writings, and other documents, as are possessed by the court to which such fiat is directed: Provided always, that all such examinations of witnesses shall be taken down in writing, and shall be annexed to and form part of the proceedings under such fiat, and that no such proof of debts or examination of witnesses in the prosecution of any fiat shall be taken by any such auxiliary court without the permission in writing of the court to which such fiat is directed.

86. And whereas the business in bankruptcy is liable to fluctuation; and whereas some one or more of the commissioners or deputy registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy appointed or to be appointed by virtue of the said recited act or of this act may occasionally from illness or other reasonable cause be absent, and it is expedient to make provision for such circumstances; be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor (as occasion may require, and for such time as the Lord Chancellor shall think fit to allow) to authorize any one or more of the commissioners or deputy registrars respectively of the Court of Bankruptcy, appointed or to be appointed by virtue of the said recited act, or other person having the like qualification as is required by the said recited act for a commissioner or deputy registrar of the said court, to act in any district in the country, for or in aid of any one or more of the commissioners or deputy registrars respectively of the Court of Bankruptcy to be appointed by virtue of this act, and so vice versa; and it shall also be lawful for the Lord Chancellor (as occasion may require, and for such time as the Lord Chancellor shall think fit to allow) to authorize any one or more of the commissioners or deputy registrars respectively to be appointed by virtue of this act, and authorized to act under the provisions of this act in any one district in the country, to act for or in aid of any one or more of the commissioners or deputy registrars respectively to be appointed by virtue of this act, and authorized to act in any other district in the country; and that any commissioner or deputy registrar respectively of the said court, or other person so acting as aforesaid, shall have all the power, jurisdiction, and authority, and perform all the duties of the commissioner or deputy registrar respectively for or in aid of whom such commissioner or deputy registrar shall so act.

87. That any commissioner or deputy registrar of such court, or other person so acting for or in aid of any commissioner or deputy registrar thereof, shall have paid to him, (and in the case of a commissioner or deputy registrar so acting, in addition to his salary as such commissioner or deputy registrar), by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by virtue of any order or orders of the Lord Chancellor, to be made from time to time for that purpose, out of the interest and dividends that have arisen or may arise from the said securities now or hereafter to be placed in the Bank of England to the said account, intitled "The Bankruptcy Fund Account," (but subject and without prejudice as aforesaid), such sum of money, in the case of any commissioner or deputy registrar so acting, for travelling and other expenses, and in the case of any other person so acting, for services, travelling, and other expenses, as the Lord Chancellor shall deem fit.

88. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts for the time being, and his clerks, and he and they are hereby respectively authorized and required, to receive and take the fee or sum of 2s. 6d. for every certified copy of declaration of insolvency, and the amount to be so received shall be by the said secretary carried to the account of the first schedule of fees annexed to the said recited act, and be applied to the purposes of the said schedule.

89. That it shall be lawful for the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy for the time being, and his clerks, and he and they are hereby respectively authorized and required, to receive and take the several fees and sums set forth in the schedule of fees hereto annexed, in respect of the business therein specified, which shall be transacted in London, and the amount to be so received shall be by him accounted for and applied in payment of such salaries and sums of money to clerks, ushers, and other under officers of the Court of Bankruptcy in London as the Lord Chancellor may from time to time direct and appoint, and the yearly surplus (if any) of such monies shall be divided between the two registrars and the deputy registrars of the said court acting in London in such proportions as the Lord Chancellor shall appoint.

90. That there shall be received and taken in the several courts authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country the several fees and sums in the said schedule of fees hereto annexed, in respect of the business therein specified which shall be transacted in the country; and that all such fees shall be accounted for and paid over to the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy acting in London, and shall be by him accounted for and applied in payment of such salaries and sums of money to ushers and other under officers of such courts in the country as the Lord Chancellor may from time to time direct and appoint, and the yearly surplus (if any) of such monies shall be divided between the several deputy registrars of such courts in the country in such proportions as the Lord Chancellor shall appoint.

91. That the Lord Chancellor shall have the like power to abolish or reduce the fees mentioned in the said schedule of fees hereto annexed, and to provide for the salaries and sums hereby made payable out of the said fees, as he now has to abolish or reduce the fees mentioned in the second schedule of fees annexed to the said recited act and to provide for the salaries and sums by the said recited act, made payable out of the said last-mentioned fees; and it is hereby further provided, that on or before the 1st March, 1844, if parliament be then sitting, or if not, within fourteen days from the commencement of the then next session of parliament, there shall be laid before parliament by the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy for the time being a return, made up, to the 31st December then last, of the total amount of fees received by or accounted for to him under the provisions of this act, and of the application of such fees, and a like return shall be afterwards made annually at the same period for the then preceding year up to the 31st December then last.

92. That on or before the 1st March in every year, if parliament be then sitting, or if not within fourteen days from the commencement of the then next session of parliament, there shall be laid before parliament by the following officers the following returns; that is to say, by the accountant in bankruptcy, a return shewing the total amount of monies paid into the Bank of England to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy and of every bankrupt's estate during the year preceding and up to the 31st December in that year, and also the total amount of monies paid out under every bankrupt's estate during the same period by orders of court or of any judge or commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, and also the balances on the said 31st December in the Bank of England standing to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy and of every bankrupt's estate; and by every official assignee, whether appointed under the provisions of the said recited act or of this act, a return shewing the total amount of his receipts and payments as such official assignee during the year preceding and up to the 31st December in that year upon every estate under his charge as such official assignee, and also the balances appearing in or by the books of such official assignee to be then in the Bank of England standing to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, and of every such estate, and also the balances of every such estate then in the hands or under the power or control of such official assignee, and also the several sums allowed to such official assignee for remuneration and for petty expenses under every such estate, such last-mentioned return to be certified by the court to which such official assignee shall be attached, and both such returns to be subject to such further regulations as to the form of the same or otherwise as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time think fit to make.

93. That the words and expressions hereinafter mentioned, which in their ordinary signification have a more confined or different meaning, shall in this act, except where the nature of the provision or the context of the act shall exclude such construction, be interpreted as follow; that is to say, the words "her Majesty" shall mean also and include the heirs and successors of her Majesty; and the words "Lord Chancellor" shall mean also and include the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper and Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, for the time being; and the words "flat or fiats, or fiat in bankruptcy or fiats in bankruptcy," shall mean also and include any commission of bankrupt; and the word "month" shall mean a calendar month; and the word "oath" shall include affirmation, where by law such affirmation is required or allowed to be taken in place of an oath; and the words "Bank of England" shall include all branches thereof; and every word importing the singular number only shall extend and be applied to several persons or things as well as one person or thing and bodies corporate as well as individuals; and every word importing the plural number shall extend and be applied to one person or thing, as well as several persons or things; and every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male; and that this act shall extend to aliens, denizens, and women, both to make them subject thereto and to entitle them to all the benefits given thereby; and that this act shall not extend either to Scotland or Ireland, except where the same are expressly mentioned; and that this act shall be construed in the most beneficial manner for promoting the benefit of creditors of bankrupts and the ends hereby intended.

94. That this act or any of the provisions thereof may be amended, altered, or repealed by any act or acts to be passed in this present session of parliament.

In the course of the present month of October will be published, the SECOND PART OF

A DIGEST and INDEX of ALL the STATUTES from Magna Charta to the end of the present Session. By GEORGE CRABB, Esq., Barrister at Law.

The first part, which is more of an Index than a Digest, has prepared the way for a Second Part, in which a fourfold arrangement has been adopted, namely, the Chronological Order of the Statutes, the Numerical Order of the Sections, the Systematic Order of the Subjects, and the Alphabetical Order of the Titles. The first comes in aid of the Systematic Order at the head of each Title, which is subdivided, when needful, into subordinate titles; the Numerical Order of the Sections being observed in the Abstracts of the most important Statutes, serving, among other purposes, to shew what portions of the Statute have been repealed or amended. To which are added, with great care and exactness, the Reported Decisions of all the Courts with which each section is connected. And, it is presumed by the publishers, that the whole presents to the professional reader a body of law unprecedented for its critical research and practical utility.

Also, in a few days, in one vol. 12mo.,

THE INSOLVENT DEBTORS ACTS, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, with PRACTICAL NOTES, appended to each Section, as a Guide to the Law and Practice of Insolvency. By C. STURGEON, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

Also,

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW relating to INFANTS. The Second Part, which completes the Work. By WILLIAM MACPHERSON, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law.

Also,

A GENERAL INDEX to the PRECEDENTS in CONVEYANCING, with PRACTICAL NOTES. By C. DAVIDSON, Esq., Barrister at Law, and Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge.

LONDON, OCTOBER 8, 1842.

We are glad to be able to present to our readers the material provisions of the Bill brought in during the late session of Parliament for amending the law relating to registration. It is intitled "A Bill to amend the Law which regulates the Registration and Qualification of Parliamentary Electors in England and Wales;" and in conformity with its title, it addresses itself not merely to the mode of registration and of adjudicating on claims to the parliamentary franchise, but to the qualifications which are henceforth to be necessary for conferring the title to such franchise.

It commences by repealing so much of the Reform Act as relates to the formation in future of a register of voters; and then proceeds to re-enact the principal part of the regulations prescribed by that act, with, however, some important modifications. For instance, in opposition to the provisions of the Reform Act, it proposes that, where the place of abode of a voter shall not be within the polling district of the parish or township to which the list of voters containing his name relates, he shall be entitled to vote at the polling place of the district in which his place of abode may be situate; and that if his place of abode shall not be within the county or part of a county for which he votes, he may vote at such other polling place as he may select; provided he makes and establishes his claim to that effect before the Revising Barrister.

Another important alteration is that which relates to the liability of the town-clerks of cities or boroughs, and the secondaries and clerks of the companies of the city of London, to give information to the Revising Barristers. By the Reform Act, (sect. 50), those functionaries were to attend the Revising Barristers, and to answer upon oath all such questions as the Barrister might put to them touching any matter necessary for revising the lists. In addition to this it is proposed by the new Bill, sect. 39, that they shall produce to the Revising Barrister "all documents, papers, or writings in their custody or power."

The words of this clause seem scarcely sufficient to carry out the apparent intention. We presume the object of giving such additional power to the Revising Barrister, is to enable him to sift the validity of claims made in cities, by persons claiming, whether under or through the corporations, or as strangers to them, when those claims depend upon documents belonging to such corporations. But supposing it in any particular case to be the interest or wish of any of the public bodies alluded to, to withhold from the Revising Barrister the inspection of any documents belonging to it; and supposing that, for that purpose, it takes such documents out of the custody or possession of its clerk;—how, under the words of this section, could the Revising Barrister enforce the production of the desired document? How, in other words, can the documents belonging to a public body be said to be in the power of its clerk, if they are not in his actual custody or possession? One can understand the artificial rule, which says, that the owner of deeds has them in his "custody, possession, or power," when they are actually in the possession of his agent; because, the owner having a legal right to demand them, has them constructively in his power at least, if not in his custody. But a town-clerk has no legal right to demand the possession of any of the deeds of his employers, except such as they think fit to commit and continue in his care, and cannot possibly therefore have any power, distinct from actual custody or possession. The result seems to be, that, so far as regards the elucidation of claims, by production of the documents belonging to the public bodies named in this section, it will be in the power of such bodies, by a little contrivance, entirely to defeat it.

Another material proposition is to be found in the 42nd clause, which provides, "that where any person whose name appears on any list of voters for any county, riding, parts, or division of a county, shall be objected to, on the ground of having changed his place of abode without having sent in a fresh notice of claim, it shall be lawful for the Barrister, on revising the list, to retain the name of such person on the list of voters; provided that such person shall prove that he possessed the same qualification in respect of which his name has been inserted in such list, and shall also supply his true place of abode." Hitherto, as our readers are aware, there have been doubts on the effect of change of abode, though the opinion most generally adopted has been, that it is a bar to the claim of the voter if he has not sent in a fresh claim.

The next alteration deserving notice, is that relating to the infliction of costs by way of punishment, on those who either assert claims on their own behalf, or object to the claims of others, without any reasonable ground. It has always been one of the grievances loudly complained of under the Reform Act, that persons making unfounded claims or frivolous objections before the Revising Barristers, could not be reached by any punishment in the shape of costs within the powers of the court. This defect it is proposed now to remedy by the 49th section of the New Registration Bill, which gives to the Barrister power to give costs, not exceeding 20s., against any person claiming, without any reasonable or probable ground for his claim; or objecting to the claim of another, and either not appearing by himself or by his agent in support of his objection; or not satisfying the Barrister that he had any reasonable or probable cause for his objection. Of the importance of this clause in tending to remove the very prevalent abuse of wholesale claims and objections, made, not only without any shadow of a ground, but without even any intention of supporting them, it is impossible to doubt. But we are not quite satisfied that the clause is as precise and definite as it might be. What is a reasonable ground for making a claim or an objection, is intelligible. The term reasonable, as applied to such subjects, has a sort of technical meaning, and means capable of being supported on grounds consistent with the generally understood maxims of law and rules of evidence. As to that expression therefore in the Bill, if it should pass into law, there may be no conflict of opinion among the Revising Barristers. But what is meant by a probable ground for a claim, or a probable cause for an objection, it is not so easy to understand. There is no standard, legal or vulgar, for measuring what is a probable ground for a claim or an objection. That ground which to one mind may appear highly probable, may to another be just the reverse; and is the Barrister to measure the probability by reference to his own mind, or to that of the claimant or objector? If the former, there will probably be as many varying decisions as there are Revising Barristers; if the latter, the Revising Barrister must first have evidence of the quality of mind of the party claiming or objecting, before he can determine whether there was probable ground for the claim or objection. We should think that the clause would be much improved by striking out all reference to probabilities, and confining the ground of awarding costs to the unreasonableness of the claim or objection.

We must not omit also, in noticing the improvements of detail proposed by this bill, to mention the abolition of the obnoxious one-shilling clause of the Reform Act. It may seem to persons of magnificent ideas on the subject of pecuniary expenditure, and of antique virtue on the subject of patriotism, that the state has but little interest in preserving the franchise of him who would not expend of his own substance to substantiate and preserve it, the very modest sum of one shilling. But experience has shewn that innumerable are the votes lost to the state by the hatred of this detested shilling; and without attempting to analyse the solidity of that political virtue, which will rather remain wholly quiescent, than pay so small a sum to burst into splendour, we may record our acquiescence in the prudence which has dictated to the framers of this bill, to withdraw from the exercise of the elective franchise a pressure, which conscientious scruples in some cases, and extreme worldly prudence in others, have practically magnified into a prohibition.

Descending from the heights of the shilling clause, we will observe next, that by the 72nd section it is proposed, with regard to mortgagees, to confine the right of voting to such mortgagees as shall have been for the requisite time in the actual possession or receipt of the rents and profits; and that where they shall not have been so, the mortgagor in possession or receipt of the rents and profits to his own use, shall vote. And with regard to trustees, it is proposed that no trustees shall vote for any trust estate; but that the cestui que trust, if in possession, or in receipt of the rents and profits to his own use, though he may receive the same through the hands of the trustee, shall and may vote, notwithstanding the trust.

We come now to the most material part of the bill, viz. those clauses which remodel the Registration Courts. By those it is proposed, that there shall be a certain number of Barristers appointed of not less than three years' standing, by the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench and the senior Judge of each circuit, to transact the business of the primary or subordinate Registration Courts. The number of Revising Barristers is not to exceed, for the county of Middlesex, including the cities of London and Westminster and the boroughs in the county of Middlesex, 3; the Home Circuit 9; the Western Circuit 13; the Oxford Circuit 12; the Midland 12; the Norfolk 8; the Northern 14; the North-West Circuit 7; and the South-West Circuit 6. Except as far as we have already noticed, and except in so far as regards the reduced number of the barristers as compared with the surface of country over which their jurisdiction will extend, the Bill does not appear materially to alter the functions of the Revising Barristers.

It is then proposed to constitute a Court of Appeal, consisting of three Barristers, to be appointed by the three Chiefs of the Courts of Common Law. These three Appeal Judges are to hold their offices during good behaviour, and to sit as a Court of Appeal in London or Westminster immediately after the termination of the business of the Revision Courts, on points of law only, to be stated in a case by the Barrister from whose decision the appeal is made. It is not quite clear, from the clauses prescribing the appointment of the Judges of Appeal, whether they are to be exclusively devoted to their duties as Judges, or whether they will be still at liberty to practise as Barristers; nor is it clear whether an appeal will lie on the ground of improper reception of evidence. On both these points we should think it desirable that the intention of the Act should not be left to inference.

We have now we believe stated the principal points of importance in the new Bill, which is certainly in our opinion the best Bill of the kind that has yet been brought forward. At the same time, there are several of the clauses to which we have referred, which seem to us to require a very critical examination, before they can be pronounced free from ambiguity and doubt; and on these, as the subject is important, we shall probably take the liberty of commenting in some future Number. In the present we find we are already transgressing the limits of the space allotted to this portion of THE JURIST.

ON THE VALIDITY OF UNSEALED LICENSES RELATING TO LAND.

In the case of Taylor v. Waters, (7 Taunt. 384, 2 Marsh. 551), the question arose whether the purchaser of a ticket of admission to a theatre had any remedy if admission was refused to him, the contract not being by deed; and it was held that he had. But the correctness of that decision has been denied; and it has been contended, that the rule, that an easement cannot be granted except by deed, applies at law even to the most trifling contract which purports to confer a right to the use of land distinct from the ownership or possession, though but for a single hour. This is evidently a very important question, and deserves to be examined at length. We shall first state all the cases that are usually cited on the side of Taylor v. Waters.

In Web v. Paternoster, (Palm. 71; Poph. 151; 2 Roll. 143), the owner of a close by parol gave the plaintiff license to stack hay upon it until he should be able conveniently to sell the hay. The owner of the close then leased the land to the defendant, who without notice to the plaintiff put in cattle which ate the hay, for which trespass was brought. It was held, against the opinion of Dodderidge, J., that the license was not countermandable; but, as the plaintiff had not used due diligence in selling, judgment was given for the defendant. This case occurred before the Statute of Frauds; but though the dictum might well be supported, on the ground that the license was a grant of the occupation of the land, and not of a mere easement over it, (see 4 Mee. & W. 543), it is evident that the court did not so regard it. The question whether the license was bad as a grant of an easement without deed, was not raised.

In Wood v. Lake, (Sayer, 3; 2 Marsh. 580), a parol agreement was made, that the plaintiff should have the liberty of stacking coals upon part of a close belonging to the defendant, for the term of seven years, and that during that term he should have the sole use of that part of the close; and the plaintiff being ejected after three years' enjoyment, brought his action on the case. Lee, C. J., and Denison, J., said, that this agreement was good for seven years; and that in Web v. Paternoster, it was laid down, that the grant of a license to stack hay does not amount to a lease of the land; and although it be in that case said, that such a license, provided the grant be for a time certain, is irrevocable, it by no means follows that an interest in the land does thereby pass. As the agreement in the present case was only for an easement, and not for an interest in the land, it did not amount to a lease, and consequently it was, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, good for seven years. Foster, J., inclined to think that it came within the words "any uncertain interest in land;" but it was held after consideration, that the license was good for seven years. The objection, that to a grant of an easement a deed was necessary independently of the Statute of Frauds, does not seem to have occurred; but the decision, that the agreement for the exclusive occupation of the land did not amount to a lease, is so obviously erroneous, that we need not hesitate to deny the authority of this case. (See Rex v. Standon, 2 M. & S. 467; Rex v. Horndon, 4 Id. 565).

In Winter v. Brockwell, (8 East, 308), the action was brought for a nuisance, by obstruction of light and air, caused by the erection of a skylight over the defendant's own ground; and a parol license to erect the skylight was held a good defence. Lord Ellenborough thought it very unreasonable that a license which had been acted upon should be recalled; and he relied on a dictum in Web v. Paternoster, that a license executed is not countermandable. This was a decision therefore, not that an easement may be created, but that it may be waived by parol; but no such distinction was taken by the court. The same point occurred in Liggins v. Inge, (5 Moo. & P. 712), and was determined in the same manner. There the plaintiff's father by parol authorized the defendant to lower the bank of a river and to erect a weir on the defendant's land, thereby diverting a part of the water which before flowed to the plaintiff's mill. The father afterwards countermanded the license; but it was held (against a very able argument for the plaintiff) that the plaintiff could not maintain an action on the case against the defendant for continuing the weir. Tindal, C. J., delivered judgment at considerable length, relying chiefly on the inconvenience which would result from a contrary decision. "Suppose," said his Lordship, "A. authorizes B. by express license to build a house on B.'s own land, close adjoining to some of the windows of A.'s house, so as to intercept part of the light, could he afterwards compel B. to pull the house down again, simply by giving notice that he countermanded the license? Still further, this is not a license to do acts which consist in repetition, as to walk in a park, to use a carriage-way, to fish in the waters of another, or the like; which license, if countermanded, the party is but in the same situation as he was before it was granted; but this is a license to construct a work which is attended with expense to the party using the license, so that after the same is countermanded, the party to whom it was granted may sustain a heavy loss." The answer to the argument from inconvenience is, that there is a remedy in equity, and that the question is merely technical, and arises on the law of real property, which it is well known does not, in courts of law, admit of any argument as incommmodate. If a party chooses to pay money for a defective conveyance, he has no remedy at law. The observation that the license was not to do acts which consist in repetition, is evidently ill-founded, for the obstruction of an easement, by permitting an erection to remain, is as much a continuing act as neglect to repair is a continuing breach of a covenant to repair.

(See Hewlins v. Shippam, cited infra). His Lordship concluded in these words: "Upon authority, this case appears to be already decided by that of Winter v. Brockwell, which rests on the judgment in Web v. Paternoster. We see no reason to doubt the authority of that case, confirmed as it has since been by the case of Taylor v. Waters, in this court, and recognised as law in the judgment of Mr. Justice Bayley, in the case of Hewlins v. Shippam, in the Court of King's Bench." His Lordship in another part of his judgment said, "There is nothing unreasonable in holding, that a right which is gained by occupancy may be lost by abandonment." But the right is never held to have been gained by the occupancy, but only to have been proved by it; previously to the recent Statute of Prescriptions, occupancy was nothing more than a circumstance from which a grant by deed might be presumed; and such presumption might have been rebutted by other circumstances. If an easement or other incorporeal hereditament cannot be granted without deed, it cannot be transferred or released without deed, for, "nihil tam conveniens est naturali æquitati quam unumquodque dissolvi eo ligamine quo ligatum est." (6 Rep. 43; see Touchst. 232; Br. Ab. "Grants," pl. 38; Mason v. Hill, 1 Nev. & M. 747; 5 B. & Adol. 1). It might seem that the doctrine of Moore v. Rawson, (3 B. & C. 332; 5 D. & R. 234), as to the abandonment of easement, supports the decision in Liggins v. Inge. The difference however between the two cases is obvious: an easement, being accessory to a tenement, is lost when the tenement is destroyed, or its identity changed, as in Moore v. Rawson; but in Liggins v. Inge and Winter v. Brockwell, no change was made in the dominant tenement. In Bradley v. Gill, (Lutw. 69), a plea of a parol license to settle in the neighbourhood and carry on a noisy trade was held bad.

In Taylor v. Waters, the facts were, that T., the lessee of the Opera House, having assigned all his interest in the premises to trustees for creditors, continued to manage the theatre, and by deed bargained and sold to J. G., his executors, administrators, and assigns, six tickets of admission, and granted to the respective bearers thereof to be admitted gratis for twenty-one years or seasons, with power to sell and dispose of the same. A purchaser of one of these tickets being by direction of the trustees refused admission by the then-acting manager, it was held, that he could sustain an action on the case against him, although it was objected that the grant of the ticket was void for want of an authority by deed from the trustees of the legal estate to the grantor. Gibbs, C. J., said: "The answer to this objection is, that this was not an interest in land, but a license irrevocable, to permit the plaintiff to enjoy certain privileges thereon, and was not required to be in writing by the Statute of Frauds, though it extended beyond the term of three years, and consequently might be granted without a deed; and that though T. had affected to grant this by deed, it was binding on the trustees, not as their deed, but as a license authorized by them. In support of this doctrine, the following authorities are found." His Lordship then cited the cases already mentioned, and proceeded: "These cases abundantly prove that a license to enjoy a beneficial privilege on land may be granted without deed, and notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, without writing."

Lastly, in Wood v. Manley, (3 Per. & D. 5; 11 Adol. & Ell. 34), ricks of hay and corn were sold to the defendant under a distress for rent; and one of the conditions of sale, to which the plaintiff (the tenant) assented, was, that the ricks might remain on the premises until Lady-day, and that the purchasers might have the use of the plaintiff's barn whenever they pleased to threaten the corn, and might enter on the premises as often as they thought proper to remove the hay and corn. In January, the plaintiff gave the defendant a written notice not to enter on his land, and he locked the gate to the close on which the corn was standing. The action was brought for a trespass by breaking the gate and removing the corn. The issue raised on one of the pleas was, that the defendant peaceably entered by the license of the plaintiff; and upon this issue, under the direction of the judge at the trial that the plaintiff's assent to the conditions of sale amounted to an irrevocable license, the jury found a verdict for the defendant, which, upon motion for a new trial, the court refused to disturb. Lord Denman, C. J.—"The argument for the plaintiff goes this length: that if I sell goods to a party who is by the terms of the sale to be permitted to come and take them, and he pays me, I may afterwards refuse to let him take them. The law countenances nothing so absurd as this: a license thus given and acted upon is irrevocable." Patteson, J.—"Taylor v. Waters shews that a license to use a seat at the Opera House, paid for, and acted upon by sitting there, cannot be countermanded."

We now come to the authorities on the other side, of which the earlier ones will be found in the judgment of the court in Hewlins v. Shippam, stated below. In Fentiman v. Smith, (4 East, 137), the plaintiff, in an action on the case for obstructing a watercourse, declared upon his possession of a mill with the appurtenances, and that by reason of such possession he had a right to the use of water running in a certain tunnel to the mill. It appeared, that the tunnel was made across an old road purchased by the defendant, eight years before, for a guinea, who agreed, for the same price, to let the plaintiff lay the tunnel there, and assisted in making it. The guinea was afterwards tendered, but the defendant refused to allow the tunnel to remain, and made the obstruction complained of. It was held, that the declaration was not sustained by the evidence, for the license was revocable at any time.

In Hewlins v. Shippam, 5 B. & Cr. 221; 7 D. & R. 783), A. having rebuilt an inn, of which he was owner, obtained leave by parol from B., the owner of adjoining premises, to construct a drain in B.'s land, in consideration of A.'s raising chimneys for B., and paving his yard, which was done, and the drain constructed. An action being brought for obstructing the drain, Graham, B., nonsuited the plaintiff, on the ground that the license, being by parol, was revocable under the Statute of Frauds; and this decision was supported by the Court of King's Bench, on the ground, that the license was void at common law for want of a deed. The judgment of the court, delivered by Bayley, J., contains so much learning, that we shall give it nearly at length. After shewing that the declaration, in effect, alleged a grant of a freehold interest, the learned judge proceeded—"When the inconveniences such a drain may occasion, from smells and the necessity of cleaning it, are considered, it is almost impossible to suppose that the defendant meant to run all risks, and allow the parties an absolute interest so long as the defendant should continue in possession, or so long as it should be requisite &c. But suppose this had been the intention, can such an interest be created by parol? A right of way, or a right of passage for water, (where it does not create an interest in the land), is an incorporeal right, and stands upon the same footing with other incorporeal rights, such as rights of common, rents, advowsons, &c. It lies not in livery, but in grant; and a freehold interest in it cannot be created or passed (even if a chattel interest may, which I think it cannot) otherwise than by deed. Termes de la Ley, a book of great antiquity and accuracy, defines an easement to be a privilege that one neighbour hath of another by charter or prescription, without profit; and it instances, 'as a way or sink through his land, or such like.' In Co. Litt. 9. a., Lord Coke distinguishes between corporeal things, which lie in livery, and incorporeal, which lie in grant, and cannot pass but by deed, as advowsons, commons, &c., and it seems to be his opinion, that (except in certain specified cases) where livery is necessary as to the one, a deed is necessary as to the other. The same may be collected from the passage already cited from Co. Litt. 42. a. In Co. Litt. 169, the excepted case of parceners is mentioned; and there it is said, that though the common of estovers or pasture, or a corody or a way lie in grant, they may, upon partition between the parceners, be granted without deed. So both Littleton and Lord Coke state, in the same part, that a rent may be granted in the case of parceners for owelty of partition without deed; and Lord Coke notices, that rents, commons, advowsons, and the like, that lie in grant, though they cannot pass without deed, may be divided between parceners by parol without deed. Chattels, whether real or personal, may in general be granted without deed; (Sheppard's Touchstone, 232); and in the case of things lying in livery, a demise thereof may be made for any number of years at common law without deed, but Lord Coke, in Co. Litt. 85. a., makes a distinction between original chattels and chattels created out of a freehold lying in grant, that the former may pass without deed, the latter cannot be created or pass without it; and whether there is a distinction in this respect between chattel interests created out of freeholds lying in livery, and freeholds lying in grant, (which I think there is not), it is not necessary to decide, because this is the case of a freehold, not of a chattel interest. Sheppard, in his Touchstone, 231, lays it down, that a license or liberty (amongst other things) cannot be created and annexed to an estate of inheritance or freehold without deed. In 2 Rolle's Abr. 62, it is laid down, that a thing lying merely in grant cannot pass without deed. In 9 Co. 9, it is said arguendo, that tenant for life cannot, by word without deed, have the privilege of being punishable for waste; and that position is adopted in Shepp. Touchst. p. 231. In Gilbert's Law of Evidence, p. 96, 6th ed., this is laid down: "If a man shews title to a thing lying in grant, he fails if the seal be torn off from his deed, for a man cannot shew a title to a thing lying in solemn agreement but by solemn agreement, and there can be no solemn agreement without a seal, so that possession alone is not sufficient, since the thing itself does not lie in possession, but in agreement; therefore, a man cannot claim a title to a watercourse, but by deed and under seal." Bolton v. The Bishop of Carlisle (2 H. Bl. 259) is at variance with the position laid down by Lord Chief Baron Gilbert, that the party fails if the seal be torn off the deed. It was decided in that case, that if the deed be destroyed, the evidence may be given to shew that the thing was once granted. The general position, however, that a man cannot claim title to a thing lying in grant but by deed, was not questioned in that case. In Mont v. Butler, (Cro. Jac. 574), where the plaintiff in replevin answered an avowry for damage feasant by a plea of license from a commoner, who had right for twenty beasts, it was objected, that if the commoner could license, he could not do so without deed, and of that opinion was the whole court. In Ramsey v. Rawson, (1 Vent. 18, 25), the objection to such a license on the account of its not being stated to be by deed, after verdict for the plaintiff on a collateral issue, was overruled, because the license was only to take the profit unicà vice, and because no estate passed by it; yet, in a subsequent case of Hoskins v. Robins, (2 Vent. 123, 163; 2 Saund. 327), a similar objection was overruled, not on the ground that a parol license would be sufficient, but on the ground that the objection to the mode of pleading the license was waived by an issue on a collateral point, and that, after verdict on such issue, it must be taken that the license was by deed; but according to the report in Saunders, Hale, C. J., and the court, seemed to be of opinion, that the license could not be granted without deed. In Harrison v. Parker, (6 East, 154), where liberty and license, power and authority, were granted to the plaintiff and his heirs to build a bridge across a river, from plaintiff's close to a close of Sir J. Warren, and liberty and license to plaintiff to lay the foundation of one end in Sir J.'s close, the grant was by deed; and in Fentiman v. Smith, (4 East, 107), where the plaintiff claimed to have passage for water by a tunnel over defendant's land, Lord Ellenborough lays it down distinctly, 'The title to have the water flowing in the tunnel over defendant's land could not pass by parol license without deed.' Upon these authorities, we are of opinion that, although a parol license might be an excuse for a trespass till such license were countermanded, a right and title to have passage for the water for a freehold interest required a deed to create it; and that, as there has been no deed in this case, the present action, which is founded on a right and title, cannot be supported. The case of Winter v. Brockwell, (8 East, 309), which was relied upon on the part of the plaintiff, appears clearly distinguishable from the present. All that the defendant then did he did upon his own land. He claimed no right or easement upon the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed a right and easement against him, viz. the privilege of light and air through a parlour window, and a free passage for the smells of an adjoining house through defendant's area; and the only point decided there was, that, as the plaintiff had consented to the obstruction of such his easement, and had allowed the defendant to incur expense in making such obstruction, he could not retract that consent without reimbursing the defendant that expense*. But that was not the case of the grant of an easement to be exercised upon the grantor's land, but a permission to the grantee to use his own land in a way in which, but for an easement of the plaintiff's, such grantee would have had a clear right to use it. Web v. Paternoster, Wood v. Lake, and Taylor v. Waters, were not cases of freehold interest, and in none of them was the objection taken, that the right lay in grant; and therefore could not pass without deed. These, therefore, cannot be considered as authorities upon the point; and on these grounds, therefore, that the right claimed by the declaration is a freehold right, and that if the thing claimed is to be considered as an easement, not an interest in land, such a right cannot be created without deed, we are of opinion that the nonsuit was right."

In the next case, Bryan v. Whistler, (2 M. & R. 318; 8 B. & C. 288), it was held that an exclusive right of burial in a vault could not be granted without deed; and in Cocker v. Couper, (1 C. M. & R. 418), the decision in Hewlins v. Shippam was followed under very similar circumstances, except that the license was given by a tenant for years, and therefore could not be said to be for a freehold interest. In Wallis v. Harrison, it was held that a parol license to make a way over land, not executed, was countermandable at any time, and did not excuse a trespass after the land had passed into the possession of a third person, the change of ownership of itself putting an end to the license. The court distinguished the case of Winter v. Brockwell, (erroneously, according to the cases already cited), on the ground that there the license was executed, expense having been incurred on the strength of it.

The distinction with regard to grants of incorporeal rights, between a right of a freehold nature, and a right for term of years only, which was suggested but not approved of by Bayley, J., in Hewlins v. Shippam, was expressly negatived in the case of Bird v. Higginson, (4 Nev. & M. 505), where the plaintiff by writing not under seal demised to the defendant a messuage, with free and exclusive right for the defendant, his friends &c., to hunt, hawk &c., in, over, and upon a manor of the plaintiff, from August to February following, at an entire rent. In an action of assumpsit for rent, it was held that the demise was void as to the right of sporting, for want of a deed; and the reservation of rent, being partly in respect of a subject of demise which failed, was void in toto*; and that the declaration not being properly framed for the purpose, the plaintiff could not recover for use and occupation. It was of course never doubted that a chattel interest in an existing incorporeal hereditament could not be created without deed. (See Shep. Touch. 229; Duke of Somerset v. Fogwell, 8 D. & R. 747; 5 B. & C. 875; Gardiner v. Williamson, 2 B. & A. 336). So in Touch. 230, it is laid down, that "if a rent-charge be granted unto me for years, I may not grant this rent over without deed."

In the most recent case on this subject, Williams v. Morris, (8 Mee. & W. 488), the purchaser of goods on a farm, endeavoured to make out a case of license similar to that in Wood v. Manley, but there was no evidence to shew any special agreement. Parke, B., however said, "With respect to the cases which have been cited, much doubt, as I have already observed, has been thrown upon their authority in a recent work of great ability and learning; (Gale & Whatley on Easements); and it certainly strikes one as a strong proposition to say that such a license can be irrevocable, unless it amount to an interest in land, which must therefore be conveyed by deed." (See Jones v. Reynolds, 6 Nev. & M. 441).

In Musket v. Hill (7 Scott, 855) it was held that the benefit of a license to dig for minerals was assignable at law.

The authorities being thus evenly balanced, we must resort to principle; which the learned reader will easily perceive at once decides against the above-cited case of Wood v. Lake, Winter v. Brockwell, and Leggins v. Inge, and in favour of Fentiman v. Smith, Howlins v. Shippam, Bryan v. Whistler, Cocker v. Couper, and Bird v. Higginson. There is more apparent difficulty in the cases of Taylor v. Waters and Wood v. Manley. Messrs. Gale & Whatley lay it down, that an easement can only be claimed as accessory to a tenement; there must be a dominant as well as a servient tenement; and for this position two authorities are cited, a dictum of Shars, J., in 21 Ed. 3, 2, pl. 5, which only goes to this—that for a way to a tenement granted to a stranger no assize would lie; and a dictum of Littledale, J. (Bailey v. Appleyard, 3 Nev. & P. 257), which however was a mere expression of doubt, and only applied to claims by prescription. The learned authors then observe, that "many personal rights, which in their mode of enjoyment bear a great resemblance to easements, as for instance rights of way, may be conferred by actual grant, independently of the possession of any tenement by the grantee; but such rights, though valid between the contracting parties, do not possess the incidents of an easement. In case of disturbance of a personal right thus given, the remedy would appear to be upon the contract only."

We think that this is a hasty conclusion; indeed it is quite evident that in the case mentioned by Shars, J., of a way in gross, there is something more than a mere remedy on the contract, i. e. a writ of covenant; for it is expressly laid down by Fitzherbert, (N. B. 183), that for a way in gross, a writ on the case lies, which could not lie if the right rested solely on contract;

* If a corporeal and an incorporeal hereditament are deemed together, an entire rent may be reserved in respect of both, although it will issue out of the former only. This is evident where incorporeal hereditaments pass in a demise as appurtenances, but it is equally true when they are demise under an independent title. 2 Roll. Ab. 451; Cro. Jac. 452; Batty v. Wells, 3 Wils. 25; Gardiner v. Williamson, 2 B. & A. 336; Doe v. Lloyd, 3 Esp. 78; Neal v. Mackenzie, 1 Mee. & W. 747.

and so in the case of a way by prescription to a church, assize de nuisance did not lie, but only case; because the claimant has no freehold in the church. (4 Ed. 3. "Nuisance," 8). And for a tenant for years, or against a stranger, the remedy for an obstruction was not an assize, but case. (22 H. C. 15). It is impossible to read in the old books concerning ways, without seeing that a way in gross was always considered to be something having a separate existence distinct from a mere right to sue for damages on covenant or assumpsit. (See Br. Ab. "Chimin," pl. 14; Senhouse v. Christian, 1 T. R. 560). It was for this reason held, that emblements, the right to which implies a right of ingress, egress, and regress, could not be granted without deed; (25 Ed. 3, 41; Co. Litt. 556; Br. Ab. "Done," pl. 40; Fitz. Ab. "Feoffments," 69); although they are so far chattels, that a contract for the sale of them is good without writing, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds. (Ross v. Roberts, 5 B. & C. 829; Sainsbury v. Mathew, 4 Mee. & W. 343). Nor can herbage, or a right of common in gross, (as distinguished from a lease of the pasture), be granted for years without deed; (Tutell v. Howell, Noy, 54; Vin. Abr. Grant, (G.) a; Tanner v. Hobbs, 2 Roll. Abr. 63; see Co. Litt. 4. b.; Cro. Jac. 362; 5 T. R. 329). So it is laid down that common in gross can only be by writing, (i. e. deed), or by prescription. (Co. Litt. 122. a.) And a deed is equally necessary to a grant of a right of fishery, estovers in gross &c. (Bird v. Higginson, 4 Nev. & M. 505; Monk v. Butler, Cro. Jac. 574; Perk. s. 61). And a corody, which is personal on both sides, can only be granted or transferred by deed. (12 Hen. 4, 17; Finch, 162).

On the whole, we may take it to be tolerably certain, that a right of way in gross is something more than a right of suing upon a contract, and cannot be granted in fee, for life, or for years without deed; and it is impossible to make out any distinction between a right of way generally during a particular period, and a right to enter the land of another for any limited number of times, and for any limited purpose, or even once and for one particular purpose. Assuming that a right of this kind cannot be granted without deed, what will be the operation of an unsealed instrument purporting to grant such a right? If upon the construction of the instrument it is held to be, not a contract to execute a future grant, but an actual grant, (see Holmes v. Sellar, 3 Lev. 305; Mounifoy's case, 4 Leon. 147), then (except as an excuse for a trespass until countermanded, 2 Roll. Abr. 62; Vaugh. 351), it is void altogether; and unless there be an agreement to execute further assurances, the grantee has no remedy at law, even to recover back the consideration. But if the instrument amounts to a contract to execute a grant, then the purchaser, after tender of a deed of grant for execution, may have his remedy at law for breach of the contract. In either case, if the subject-matter is of sufficient value, he will have a remedy in equity. It seems to follow that a purchaser of an ordinary ticket of admission to a theatre, (which clearly cannot be treated as a contract to execute a grant), has no remedy either at law or in equity, in case he is refused admission. What redress he might obtain in a court of conscience, it is from the nature of such courts necessarily impossible to predict*.

In conclusion, whether we are right or wrong in our opinion on this difficult question, we think it will not be denied by any but the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that it is high time the senseless distinction between sealed and unsealed writings should be abolished; at least so far as it affects the transfer of things and rights lying in grant.

* Not to give our theatre-visiting friends any unnecessary alarm, we may mention that there is no legal objection to a parol demise of a particular box or seat at a theatre for a night; our remarks above are confined to grants of a mere right of admission.

LONDON, OCTOBER 15, 1842.

THE approach of the time of holding the Quarter Sessions of the Peace, reminds us of an intention we some time since formed, of noticing an Act passed during the last session to define the jurisdiction of the justices. Of that jurisdiction it is unnecessary to state the origin, which must be well known to our readers; the present object being to remind them of a new law. The alterations in the Criminal Law, by taking away the punishment of death in so many instances, brought within the jurisdiction of the justices in Quarter Sessions many offences which, because punishable capitally, could not formerly be tried by them. It will be seen that these are again withdrawn from it by the late act. It enacts "That neither the justices of the peace, nor the recorder of any borough, shall, at any session of the peace, try any person for any treason, murder, or capital felony, or any felony which, when committed by any person not previously convicted of felony, is punishable by transportation beyond the seas for life, or for any of the following offences; (that is to say),

- "1. Misprision of treason.
- "2. Offences against the Queen's title, prerogative, person, or government, or against either House of Parliament.
- "3. Offences subject to the penalties of præmunire.
- "4. Blasphemy, and offences against religion.
- "5. Administering or taking unlawful oaths.
- "6. Perjury and subornation of perjury.
- "7. Making or suborning any other person to make a false oath, affirmation, or declaration, punishable as perjury, or as a misdemeanor.
- "8. Forgery.
- "9. Unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to crops of corn, grain, or pulse, or to any part of a wood, coppice, or plantation of trees, or to any heath, gorse, furze, or fern.

- "10. Bigamy, and offences against the laws relating to marriage.
- "11. Abduction of women and girls.
- "12. Endeavouring to conceal the birth of a child.
- "13. Offences against any provisions of the laws relating to bankrupts and insolvents.
- "14. Composing, printing, or publishing blasphemous, seditious, or defamatory libels.
- "15. Bribery.
- "16. Unlawful combinations and conspiracies, except conspiracies or combinations to commit any offence which such justices or recorder respectively have or has jurisdiction to try when committed by one person.
- "17. Stealing or fraudulently taking, or injuring or destroying, records or documents belonging to any court of law or equity, or relating to any proceeding therein.
- "18. Stealing or fraudulently destroying or concealing wills or testamentary papers, or any document or written instrument, being or containing evidence of the title to any real estate, or any interest in lands, tenements, or hereditaments."

The 2nd section empowers a Judge of the Superior Courts at Westminster, "acting under any commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery for any county, to issue, if he shall think fit, any writ or writs of certiorari or other process, directed to the justices of the peace acting in and for such county, riding, division, or liberty, or to the recorder of any borough situated within the said county, commanding the said justices and recorder severally to certify and return into the court holden under the authority of such commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, all indictments or presentments found or taken before any of the said justices of the peace, or recorder, of any offences which, after the passing of this act, such justices or recorder will not have jurisdiction to try, and the several recog-nances, examinations, and depositions, relative to such indictments and presentments; and also, if necessary, by writ or writs of habeas corpus, to cause any person or persons who may be in the custody of any gaol or prison, charged with any such offence, to be removed into the custody of the keeper of the common gaol of the county."

It is to be observed, that the justices or recorders are only forbidden by the first section to try any person for the offences enumerated. It may be supposed from this, coupled with the above provision for the removal of indictments, that it is still competent for a prosecutor to prefer a bill of indictment for any of those offences before the grand jury at the Quarter Sessions, and that the same when found may be removed and tried at the assizes. The act seems to refer to the trial of an indictment already found. And, indeed, if this is not the construction of it, the provision in the second section is unnecessary, except to meet the cases of indictments found before the passing of the Act, but not then tried, for which purpose it seems unlikely that words of so extended an import would have been used. And instances may not unfrequently occur, with respect to some, at least, of the specified offences, where, upon a magistrate declining to hold a person to bail, it would be desirable to have an indictment at once found, in order that a bench warrant might be issued. On the other hand, however, it is to be observed, that in a case which occurred before the passing of this act, (R. v. Haynes, R. & M., C. N. P. 298), the judge treated an indictment for forgery, found at the sessions and removed by certiorari, as a nullity, and refused to try it. Among the offences mentioned in the Act are some which the sessions never had power to try: treason, misprision of treason, præmunire, forgery, and perjury at common law. With respect to capital felonies, although the justices in sessions had, in point of law, jurisdiction, it was not the practice for them to try any indictments in such cases.

Recent statutes, however, had, as we before observed, placed many of such offences within their reach, and rendered the late enactment necessary. The other excluded offences are unfit to be brought before such tribunals, on account of the frequent intricacy of the proofs, and the nice points of law likely to arise during the trial. By this we are reminded of what has often appeared to us a great defect in this branch of the criminal administration. A Judge, although possessed, as he must be, of great legal knowledge and experience, has power, when any point of law arises which he thinks himself unable to decide, to reserve it for the opinion of his brethren upon the bench, and to have it solemnly argued before them. Recorders and Justices have no such power, but must decide for themselves; and the law thus unwisely provides, that he should have assistance who least requires it, whilst they with whom to err is as probable as to be right, are left without a guide. Nor does the permitting them to try ordinary offences only remove the evil; for, as must be known to every one who practises in those courts, very difficult points of law may arise upon a trial for even a common larceny. It seems, indeed, that, whilst at the risk, it may be, of the poor man getting no justice at all, the utmost care is manifested, that, in disputes about his property, of even small value, it should be both good and expensive, the case is reversed when he is placed at the bar of a criminal court, with danger threatening his good name, the only wealth, oftentimes, of the poor.

But to return to our Act of Parliament. The third section enacts, that where an indictment shall be removed, the recognizances which have been entered into shall be obligatory upon the parties to appear at the assizes, in like manner as if originally entered into for that purpose. But it is provided, that one week's notice shall have been given to the parties bound by the recognizance. It would seem that this is to be after the writ of certiorari is granted, as the Judge granting it is directed by the Act to cause the party applying to enter into a recognizance to do so. The words of the second section import, that the Judge, acting under a commission for any county, is to issue a writ to the Justices of such county. We apprehend, therefore, that an application cannot be made to him until after the commencement of the assizes for the county to which the Justices belong; and if seven days are then to elapse before the trial, it would, in many instances, be impossible for it to be had during the same assizes. Does the Act mean that the party applying for the writ may give the notice in anticipation?—It does not seem to us to do so; it would be better if it did. If, indeed, these clauses applied only to cases occurring just at the time of its passing, and were of a temporary nature, it would be of little consequence; but, as we before said, they appear to embrace cases which may occur hereafter.

With these suggestions we now leave it to the observation of our readers.

One of the clauses of the Act of last session to amend the Law of Copyright has been the subject of general remark. We allude to that prohibiting the importation, for sale or hire, of books printed abroad, in which there is a subsisting copyright, or the selling, publishing, or exposing to sale or hire, such books, knowing them to have been unlawfully imported. As this strikes at a practice which has prevailed to a great extent, it may not be amiss to remind our readers that the purchase of such books by any persons for their own use is not forbidden, nor are they liable to an action under the statute for having such in their possession. By the 23rd section, books unlawfully printed or imported are to be deemed the property of the proprietor of the copyright, who may bring an action of detinue or trover for their detention or conversion. This, however, extends only to books imported for sale or hire, and the onus of proving them to be such would, we apprehend, lie upon the party bringing the action. Considering the difficulty which a proprietor of copyright will have in making out his case in such actions, it would, perhaps, have been better to have treated the possession in any part of the British dominions of a book purporting to be unlawfully printed, as prima facie evidence of illegality, and to have made the party shew how he came by it.

ON THE EFFECT OF THE 1 VICT. c. 26, s. 33,
ON THE DOCTRINE OF LAPSE.

The 33rd section of the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26) has given rise to conflicting opinions as regards its effect on the doctrine of lapse. It will be recollected that by that section it is enacted, "that where any person, being a child or other issue of the testator, to whom any real or personal estate shall be devised or bequeathed, for any estate or interest not determinable at or before the death of such person, shall die in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue, and any such issue of such person shall be living at the time of the death of the testator, such devise or bequest shall not lapse, but shall take effect as if the death of such person had happened immediately after the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will."

On the construction of this clause it has been contended, on the one hand, that where the child of a testator pre-deceases such testator, leaving issue, the effect of the statute on a testamentary gift to the deceased child is not that the issue of such deceased child will necessarily be entitled, but that the subject of testamentary gift is constituted by force of the statute the disposable property of the devisee or legatee, and as such will follow the dispositions of his will. (See Jarman on Wills, 314, and Sugden on Wills, pp. 111, 113). On the other hand, it has been contended, that a testator is only empowered, by the express words of the statute, to pass such interest as he may be entitled to at the time of his death, (Sect. 3); that the 24th section only refers to the estate comprised in the will; that it is impossible to say that a devisee or legatee, dying in the lifetime of the testator, is entitled at the time of his death to any estate or interest in the devise or legacy; that consequently the subject of such devise or legacy cannot be comprised in the will of the devisee or legatee so dying; and that, taking the effect of these clauses in connexion with the very obvious anxiety of the Legislature, by the 33rd section, to provide against the disentitling of the issue of the deceased child by reason of his decease in the lifetime of the testator, the intention and effect of the statute is, that, in the case of lapse, referred to by the 33rd section, the issue of the deceased donee shall take by representation. (Worthington on Wills, 459, notis).

The point is, unquestionably, one of very considerable difficulty; for while on the one side the arguments of the learned writer last cited are perhaps most consistent with a rational exposition of the intention of the Legislature, as applying a fit remedy to a specific mischief; on the other side, it must be admitted, that however artificial the reasoning in support of the opposite construction of the statute, and however singular the consequences which seem to flow from it may appear to many, such reasoning and such consequences result almost unavoidably from the force of the words used by the Legislature.

The language of the early part of the 33rd section clearly points at the mischief intended to be removed; viz. the loss by the children of a deceased child of the testator, of the provision made for such child, and through him almost universally intended by the testator for the family of such child. If that had not been the intention of the Legislature, it would have been unnecessary to have made it a condition of the clause having any application, that the donee pre-deceasing his testator, should leave issue, and that such issue should be living at the death of the testator. It is plain, that if the child of a testator were to die in his lifetime, not leaving children or other issue living at the death of the testator, lapse would take place; the object of the clause being only to prevent lapse, when there are living at the death of the ancestor issue of the child, or other his issue to whom he has devised or bequeathed property. The issue are, therefore, plainly the object of the care of the statute, of which the intention appears to be to preserve the provision obviously destined by the testator for them, and not to increase the testamentary power of the deceased donee. At the same time, although the inference from this part of the 33rd section is irresistible, that to prevent the provision of the issue of the deceased donee from failing by lapse was the object of the care of the Legislature, there is nothing to shew an intention to prevent their provision from failing by any other means; nothing to shew an intention of providing for them at all events. We come then to the latter part of the section, and by that it is provided that the devise or legacy which would have lapsed by the old law, shall not lapse, but "shall take effect as if the death of such person had happened immediately after the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention &c."

Now, if the stat. 1 Vict. c. 26 had not passed, and if the child of a testator, being a devisee or legatee under his will, had survived the testator, it is incontestable that the will of such devisee or legatee would have passed the subject of the devise or legacy to him. And what the statute appears to do, is, to create by its force an imaginary state of circumstances, and then to say that such effects shall take place as if that imaginary state of circumstances were real. It says that the devise or legacy shall take effect, as if the devisee or legatee had survived the testator. Now, if it be held that the will of a devisee or legatee pre-deceasing the testator, under the circumstances referred to in the 33rd section, does not comprise in it and pass the subject of the gift, that is, in effect, to contradict the statute, and to say that the gift shall not take effect as if the donee had survived the testator; because one of the effects of his actually so surviving, would be that his will would comprise and pass it.

It is objected to this, as we have already mentioned, that a testator under the 1 Vict. c. 26 can only pass by his will such interests as he may be entitled to at the time of his death; and that he is clearly not entitled at the time of his death to the subject of a gift contained in a will, which does not take effect till after his death. That he is not actually so entitled, there can be of course no question. But that does not seem necessarily to exclude the particular operation of the statute to which we are at present addressing our argument. The question is, not whether the donee is entitled to the subject of the gift, but whether the statute does not give him the same power over it as if he were entitled to it at the time of his death: whether it does not, for the special purpose of the 33rd section, suppose the donee to be living at the death of the testator, and impress upon the gift the same qualities as it would have, if he had actually been living; among others, the quality of being comprised in and following his testamentary dispositions.

We confess that the train of reasoning by which this construction of the statute is arrived at, although perhaps somewhat artificial, appears to us to be almost an inevitable consequence of the legal effect of the words used in the latter part of the 33rd section. And the question remaining is, whether the construction thus put on them is inconsistent with the former part. We have observed upon that, that the anxiety of the statute to prevent failure, by lapse, of the provision destined indirectly for the issue, is manifest. But there it stops. It does not prescribe how such provision is to be preserved for the issue, whether by force of the statute itself, or by the disposition in their favour of the original donee; nor does it even prescribe that such provision shall, in all cases, be preserved for the issue.

There is nothing therefore inconsistent with the intention of merely preserving the provision of the issue from failure by lapse, in attributing to the statute an intention to give to the donee power to dispose of it by will.

On the whole, we confess, that although the clause in question is certainly open to doubt and argument, it appears to us that its parts are better reconciled with each other, by adopting the construction contended for by the two learned writers to whom we have first referred, than that, according to which it must be held, not merely to intend the preservation of the provision of the issue of the deceased donee from lapse, but to give to the latter part of the clause the invariable effect of vesting such provision in the issue by force of the statute.

LAW AGENCY.—TO COUNTRY SOLICITORS.
A Gentleman of many years' experience, and of respectable and established Practice in London, is desirous to extend his Agency Connexion, and to become the Town Agent of respectable Country Practitioners upon such advantageous terms to them, as to make their Common-Law and Chancery Practice, as well as the other business conducted through Agency, a much greater source of profit to them than under the ordinary terms of Agency.

The Advertiser will give and require every satisfactory Reference. Apply by Letter to "W. O. S.," Messrs. Stevens & Norton, Law Publishers, Bell-yard, Lincoln's Inn.

LAW PARTNERSHIP.—A Gentleman, aged 28, who has been in practice about five years, and is fully competent to the management of a town or country business, is desirous of a PARTNERSHIP in a respectable office, in which he would take the principal or entire labour, as might be agreed upon. The advertiser having a small private property, income is not so much his present object as a comfortable and permanent Partnership, and one of the terms would be that the premium required should be deducted from the profits. Any Gentleman in want of relief from age or infirmity, will find the present a favourable opportunity. The most satisfactory references will be given. Address, with real name and particulars, A. Z., Jurist Office, 3, Chancery-lane, London.

On Thursday, October 20th, will be published, in 3 vols. royal 8vo., containing nearly 3000 pages, 51. 5s. boards,

LONDON, OCTOBER 22, 1842.

WE return to Sir James Graham's Registration Bill for the purpose of offering some observations on what appear to us to be obscurities, in some of its clauses.

And firstly with respect to the functions of the Judges of Appeal. The 55th clause authorizes their appointment with no inconsiderable formality, and specifically designates them Judges of a Court of Appeal; and the 56th makes their tenure of office, like that of other Judges who are intended to be of some consequence, during good behaviour, subject to determination only on address by the two Houses of Parliament. From these two clauses it would be inferred, that the Judges are intended to resign practice as barristers while they hold their offices. But then comes the 59th, which prescribes the remuneration of the Judges of the Court of Appeal in the following words: "And be it enacted, That there shall be paid to each of the Judges of the said Court of Appeal, a salary after the rate of — by the day, so long as they shall be called upon to sit; and such salaries, and also the necessary expenses of the Court of Appeal, shall be paid by the Lord High Treasurer of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the time being, out of the consolidated fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland."

Now this is certainly a very singular way of paying Judges intended to be of purely judicial rank and functions; and from its similarity to the present mode of remunerating Revising-Barristers and other semi-judicial persons, whose judicial functions are intended only to be temporary and accessory to their habitual occupation, it leads one to infer, that the Judges of the Court of Appeal are not intended to abandon practice. This inference is also strengthened by the 62nd section, which appears to contemplate the probability of the Court of Appeal being occupied only at a particular period of the year, and for a short time. On the construction of all these clauses it is certainly not manifest whether the Judges of the Court of Appeal are or not intended to abandon practice when they accept office.

With regard to any creation of a distinct Court of Appeal from the Courts of the Revising Barristers, we have on preceding occasions, in the pages of the JURIST, expressed an opinion; and we continue to think it highly probable that such a Court will not have enough to do to keep the law of its Judges in good exercise. The prevailing opinion, however, seems in favour of such a Court of Appeal. The only question therefore remaining is, if it must exist, how it should be constituted to be efficient. And we confess, that, to our mind, it appears, that if a Court of Appeal is to be of any value at all, its Judges ought to be put on the footing of Judges of permanent and superior Courts. They ought to be nothing but Judges, and they ought to be paid in such a manner as to free them from all uncertainty and sordid inducements;—in a word, they ought to be paid by fixed salaries. The idea of a Judge, intended to exercise superior functions, and to have weight with the public, being paid by the day for so long as he shall be wanted to do work, has in it, to our mind, something so derogatory and so inapt, as to make us doubt that it can have originated with such men as those whose names appear on the back of this bill. If, indeed, it is the intention of the bill that the Judges of the Court of Appeal should be only Judges pro tempore, and should not abandon practice, then, of course, the 59th clause is fitted for such an intention. But if that be the intention, we can only say that it is one opposed to the whole course of modern improvement. There is not one class of judicial business in which the vice of the system of uniting the judicial with the professional character has not been felt: There is not one class of such business in which the tendency of modern improvement has not been to abolish the union, and to appoint permanent Judges. Thus has it been with Bankruptcy Commissioners, first in London, and now in the country; with Insolvency Commissioners; with Lunacy Commissioners; in all of which the principle of uniting judicial functions with professional practice has been rejected. And is it in the teeth of this practice, of the very sound reasoning, and of the mass of experience on which it is founded, that it should be now proposed to return to the old and pernicious system for the dispatch of a class of judicial business, more open than any other to all the real and all the imaginary sources of bias, which render it improper that the same person should be one day Counsel and the next a Judge?

We pass now to the 61st clause, which proposes "that it shall be lawful for any person claiming to be entitled, or objecting to the right of any other person, to be registered as a voter, and who shall be dissatisfied with any decision of a Revising Barrister on any point of law affecting such claim or objection, or for any person on behalf of such claimant or objector, to appeal from such decision; and upon application made to him for that purpose in open court, the Barrister shall state in writing the facts which, according to his judgment, have been established by the evidence, and which shall be relevant and material to the validity of the claim or objection, and shall also state in writing his decision thereupon, and shall read the statement in open court, and then and there sign the same; and the appellant shall make and sign a declaration in writing at the foot of such statement to the following effect; that is to say, 'I appeal from this decision;' and the Barrister shall indorse upon the appeal-paper the name and place of abode of the appellant, and of the party whom he shall direct to be treated as the respondent, and at or before the end of his circuit shall deliver, or cause to be delivered, all such appeal-papers to the Judges of the Court of Appeal." And the 62nd contains the following words: "That the subjects of such appeals shall be questions of law only, and not questions of fact."

It is, as we have already observed, not quite clear from these clauses, whether an appeal will lie on the ground of improper reception of evidence. The question whether evidence has or has not been improperly received, is undoubtedly a "point of law;" and when it is said in the 62nd clause, that an appeal is not to lie on "a question of fact," it must, we should think, be meant merely that there is to be no appeal on the question, whether the evidence received did or not establish certain facts; and we cannot imagine it to be meant by that clause, that the question whether certain evidence has or not been properly received or rejected, should be excluded from being the subject of appeal. If, therefore, we were to look merely at the first part of the 61st clause, and the words cited from the 62nd, we should think that the improper reception or rejection of evidence is intended to be a ground of appeal. But then the mode in which it is directed that the Revising Barrister shall state a case for the Court of Appeal, seems to preclude the possibility in practice of appealing against the improper reception of evidence; since he is to state the facts "which, according to his judgment, have been established by the evidence;" and on those, and on those only, the Court of Appeal is to decide the point of law involved in them. The 61st clause seems to make the statement of facts of the Revising Barrister conclusive; and hence, while it professes to give an appeal on any point of law, to shut out all discussion of the law of evidence. We apprehend this can hardly be the intention; for a Revising Barrister is quite as likely to miscarry by the improper reception or rejection of evidence, as by any other erroneous interpretation of the law. And it is quite as important to suitors claiming the franchise or objecting to the title of other claimants, to be protected in the due reception or rejection of the evidences of title, as in the due adjudication on the effect of those evidences when once admitted.

NEW BANKRUPTCY COMMISSIONERS.—Since the recent publication of the correct list in the columns of the Times, there has been much speculation in legal circles as to the location of the new Commissioners of Bankruptcy. Considerable difficulty has been experienced in meeting the wishes of all the gentlemen appointed as to their ultimate destination. The following, however, are the arrangements finally determined on:—

Birmingham . . . Mr. Balguy, Queen's Counsel, and Mr. Daniell.
Liverpool . . . Mr. Skirrow, Queen's Counsel, and Mr. Charles Phillips.

Manchester . . . Mr. Serjeant Ladow, and Mr. Jemmett.

Leeds Mr. M. J. West and Mr. Montagu Bore.

Bristol Mr. Serjeant Stephen and Mr. Stevenson.

Exeter Mr. Serjeant Goulburn.

Newcastle Mr. Ellison.

CHANCERY REFORMS.—It is understood that the Lord Chancellor and the other judges of the Court of Chancery, have had it in contemplation for some time past, in addition to the extensive alterations which will come into operation on the 28th instant, to remodel many of the subordinate branches of their respective courts, with a view of placing them on such a footing as cannot fail to insure their practical utility. The functions of the six clerks and sworn clerks, or in common language the clerks in court, will cease on the day in question, and their successors are to be officers designated clerks of the records, and taxing masters, who will perform the duties at, it is said, one-third of the cost at present charged to the suitors. Amongst the departments expected to be improved, are the Accountant-General's and Registrar's Offices. These offices are to be kept open from 10 till 4 o'clock, instead of from 11 till 2, as at present, and which has been a source of complaint in the profession. The mode now adopted of taking the depositions of witnesses, which is open to serious objections, will be thoroughly investigated. The Masters' Offices and the Affidavit Offices are likewise to undergo very considerable alteration, in order to curtail the charges and to facilitate the operations of the practitioners.—The Times, Oct. 20.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—THIRD EDITION.

In 3 vols., royal 8vo., 4l. 14s. 6d. boards.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of EVIDENCE and DIGEST of PROOFS in CIVIL and CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS. Third Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq., of the Inner Temple, one of her Majesty's Counsel.

"There are now two general treatises on this extensive and intricate branch of Law, Mr. Starkie's and Mr. Phillips's, of which it is not too much to say, that they excel all the text books of the day in the combination of learning and research with clear method and scientific precision. Mr. Phillips's work, however, (that is to say, the last edition—which was published in 1838), labours under this disadvantage, that it is confined to an examination of the general principles of Evidence, and does not treat of the rules applicable to particular subjects and actions, otherwise than as they illustrate those general principles. Mr. Starkie on the other hand, reserving the first part of his work chiefly for the discussion of general principles, devotes two closely printed volumes to a Digest, alphabetically arranged, of the Rules of Evidence and the proof applicable to particular subjects and actions. It is in this that the great practical superiority and utility of Mr. Starkie's book consist."—The Jurist, No. 269.

PRACTICE OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS, &c.—A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE APPELLATE JURISDICTION OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND PRIVY COUNCIL, and on PARLIAMENTARY DIVORCE; with a Selection of Leading Cases. By JOHN MACQUEEN, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law. Royal 8vo., 11. 11s. 6d. bds.

"The work of Mr. Macqueen supplies the most copious and important information upon the whole of the subject of which it treats; it possesses also a character of authentic accuracy, or rather of judicial authority, to which no book of practice in any other department of the law can make any pretensions, and the want of which in the principal tribunals, both of law and equity, is often productive of delay, perplexity, and expense to the litigating parties as well as the practitioners. It is obvious that a work composed under such circumstances ought to find a place in every law library in the kingdom."—Times, Sept. 28, 1842.

SMITH'S LEADING CASES.—A SELECTION OF LEADING CASES ON VARIOUS BRANCHES OF THE LAW. With Notes. By JOHN WILLIAM SMITH, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. Royal 8vo., 2 vols., Second Edition, price 21. 8s. boards. 1841.

LONDON, OCTOBER 29, 1842.

It is said, that, among the subjects to which the attention of the authorities will be directed in carrying out reforms in the practice of the Court of Chancery, one is the existing mode of taking the depositions of witnesses. We trust that this is a true rumour, for undoubtedly the machinery for examining witnesses in Chancery is in a state most unsatisfactory as an engine for the discovery of truth; and although the direction and details of the requisite alterations may call for much consideration, it is incontestable that material alteration, both in principle and detail, is necessary. The mode of examining witnesses in Chancery is indeed, from the first to the last stages, the most singular that can be well imagined.

In the first instance, after the bill and answer have been put on the file, and it becomes necessary for either the plaintiff or defendant to prove his case, the course, as it is well known to our readers learned in equity proceedings, is to instruct counsel to prepare interrogatories to examine witnesses for the purpose of proving the material allegations contained in the pleadings. If any one were asked how this was done, he would probably imagine, keeping in view that the object is to extract from the witnesses all the knowledge possessed by them tending to establish the truth of a certain set of facts, that counsel would be informed who and what the witnesses are, and would be put in possession of the peculiar information supposed to be possessed by each witness intended to be examined. But this would be a course far too definite, and if we may so term it, too unideal for Chancery; and counsel, as we know, are not in general instructed as to any such special information, with reference to any particular witness, as would enable him so to shape his interrogatory as to extract from that witness matter tending to establish some collateral fact, which might be of great importance. He is, on the contrary, in general simply instructed to advise what facts must be proved, and to frame interrogatories which shall meet those facts. His interrogatories are therefore not addressed, as at law, to the mind of the witness, as well as to the facts, but merely to certain facts supposed to be in the knowledge of some unseen, and to him, imaginary witnesses. The difference of result between these two processes of examination must be obvious. The examining counsel is by the former plan frequently enabled to extract from a witness in the course of examination many facts, the existence of which is only suggested to the examiner by the unforeseen answers of the witnesses; and thus to form perhaps an entire chain of evidence, where he originally only expected to procure a few links. In the latter, or Chancery mode of proceeding, the counsel is in the dark, and there he may remain, save in so far as his imagination may suggest to him acute and far-sighted inquiries, calculated to draw forth matters not directly suggested by the pleadings.

Thus the Chancery examination begins with a grievous defect. The next item of defect is, in truth, but an emanation from this original one, viz. the confining the examination of each witness to some particular interrogatory or interrogatories. Undoubtedly, there can be no necessity in Equity, any more than at Common Law, to put to every witness a whole set of interrogatories, intended to embrace all the material facts in a case. But, inasmuch as the different facts of a case are often very singularly connected by almost imperceptible affinities, it must frequently happen that a witness, who knows, or professes to know prominently only certain facts, to which the particular interrogatories intended for him are addressed, does also, as connected with those, know certain others, which being referred to only by interrogatories never exhibited to him, are in no way called to his recollection. Now, at law, this extra knowledge of the witness must almost inevitably be brought out, in the course of that discursive examination which the sagacity of counsel will found upon the unanticipated matter thrown out by the witness; whereas in Equity, what the counsel has not foreseen, there is no one to supply; the examiner being bound by the record, and unable to take a deposition unless it is strictly called for by the interrogatory. It is manifest, that in many cases the real nature and extent of the evidence which a witness can give, may be mistaken by the person giving instruction for the pleadings; and that, while the witness may be unable to prove the particular circumstances alleged in the pleadings, and to which he is interrogated, he may be able to prove some very similar and important facts, as to which, no inquiry being strictly made by the interrogatories, he cannot be examined. It is true, that, as it is expressed by Mr. Gresley, in his useful Treatise on Evidence in Equity, a remedy is supplied to some of these defects, by allowing, under special circumstances, a re-examination, or sometimes even a cross-examination after publication; but it is clear that such a remedy is very inadequate, amounting to very little more than this, that, after a party has, at great expense, been permitted to find out that the witnesses cannot prove what he had been led to suppose they could prove, he may, under very special circumstances, make a further attempt, which may be equally futile, to find out what they can prove.

Next comes the double secrecy; the secrecy with which the deposition is taken by the examiner; and the secrecy which is preserved as between the parties. The result of the former is of course to deprive the examiner of much valuable assistance; to throw him on his own resources; to withhold all chance of correction being applied to any misconception on his part, or on that of the examinant; in fact, to reject, as if in contempt of the universal experience of mankind, the benefit which arises from the frequently greater clairvoyance of lookers-on, than of those engaged in any special occupation. How frequently do we not see in courts of law that the answer of a witness is understood by the examining counsel, and perhaps by the jury, in a different sense to that which he means really to convey, and that his real meaning is suspected and drawn forth by some further question put by the Court or by either Counsel! That this sort of misconceptions takes place, at least as largely, in taking depositions in answer to written and very technically worded interrogatories, cannot be doubted; but there is in general no way of removing them, or even of ascertaining whether they have existed or not. The opinion of Mr. Plumer, stated on this point to the Chancery Commission, is very striking: "The secrecy of the examination," says that gentleman, "appears, to say the least of it, of very doubtful policy. It throws an extremely heavy responsibility on the examiner. If a witness has omitted to mention, or the examiner to take down, a material statement, or if the witness has misconceived the question or the examiner the answer, the defect is but rarely discovered till it is too late to supply or correct it. Sometimes the case is overloaded with evidence, and much unimportant matter taken down, from the party's not knowing what has been proved as the examination proceeds; in other instances the case is defectively proved, through the unexpected failure of a witness, whose testimony, had such failure been known in time, might have been corroborated or supplied."

Lastly, we will notice the secrecy observed as between the parties. As each party examines his witnesses secretly, and as no publication of any part of the evidence is allowed till after the whole is concluded, it follows of course, that if one party wishes to cross-examine the witness of the other, he must do so without having the shadow of an idea of what is the nature of the evidence in chief. In general, the only use of a cross-examination is to rebut the evidence in chief, and this can well be done in the mode of taking evidence at law, where one party having heard what the witness has stated in his examination in chief, may put such questions as are adapted for the express purpose of eliciting answers contradicting or modifying such evidence in chief. But in Equity a cross-examination is in fact nothing but another examination in chief, which may or may not touch upon the matters elicited in the original examination in chief. And the result is in practice, as it is well known, that cross-examination is in general considered as mere waste of time and paper, and may be said to have in Equity proceedings no real existence.

The principal source of all these defects seems to be traceable to the plan of taking all evidence in writing, a plan which, whatever may be its apparent fitness by analogy to the general scheme of Equity procedure, does not appear to be necessarily required by the principles of that procedure; because the reasons which may exist for the necessity of the plaintiff and defendant shaping their charge and defence respectively in writing, have no necessary application to the case of an ordinary witness. A defendant in Equity is called upon to bare his conscience to the searching inquiry of the plaintiff. It is fitting therefore and necessary that the defendant should have before him the allegations of the plaintiff, in such form as will enable him coolly and deliberately to consider and weigh them; and it is equally fit and necessary that he should have the like opportunity of considering and weighing in what precise form and words he shall set forth his defence. The whole scheme and aim indeed of the written pleadings and their rules, is that the plaintiff shall not suddenly entrap the defendant; and that the defendant shall not, on the other hand, elude the plaintiff; and this double object can only be attained by using written pleadings. But to the case of witnesses these reasons do not apply; the witness in Equity is no more than the witness at Law; his conscience is not more ransacked in the one case than the other; he is simply called on to bear testimony to facts, in the result of which he has no interest; and as to the mode therefore of giving his testimony, he requires neither more nor less care; neither more nor less protection, than the witness in an action at Law.

These views have, we believe, become of late much entertained in the profession. We apprehend therefore that the principle of reform in the mode of taking evidence in Equity, will consist in the introduction of viva voce evidence, and publicity in the examination; in fact, in assimilating, as far as the genius of Equity procedure will allow, the mode of examination in Chancery to that pursued in actions at Law.

Regulæ Generales.ORDER OF COURT OF CHANCERY.

26TH OCTOBER, 1842.

The Right Honourable JOHN SINGLETON LORD LYNCHURST, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of The Right Honourable HENRY LORD LANGDALE, Master of the Rolls, the Right Honourable SIR LANCELOT SHADWELL, Vice Chancellor of England, and the Right Honourable the Vice Chancellor SIR JAMES WIGRAM, doth hereby, in pursuance of an Act of Parliament passed in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled, "An Act for Abolishing certain Offices in the High Court of Chancery in England;" and in pursuance and execution of all other powers, enabling him in that behalf, order and direct in manner following: that is to say, Clerk of the Inrolments in Chancery.

I. That all acknowledgments, affidavits, or affirmations required for the purpose of inrolling any deed or other document in Chancery may be made, sworn, or affirmed, before the Clerk of Inrolments in Chancery, or before any Clerk of Records and Writs, as occasion may require for the better despatch of business.

II. That the Clerk of Inrolments in Chancery shall take and receive all such fees and sums of money as have heretofore been lawfully received by the Clerks of Inrolments and their deputies, or by the Six Clerks, or any of them, as Comptrollers of the Hanaper, or as Riding Clerk, and shall pay all such fees and sums of money into the Bank of England, in the name of the Accountant-General, to be placed to the credit of the account, intituled, "The Suits' Fee Fund Account."

Clerks of Records and Writs.

III. That the Clerks of Records and Writs shall perform all such duties as have heretofore been performed by the Six Clerks, Sworn Clerks, or Waiting Clerks, as officers of the court, in relation to the several matters hereinafter mentioned; that is to say,

The filing, custody, copying, and amending of all informations, bills, demurrers, pleas, answers, and other pleadings and records.

The entering of appearances, rules, consents, notes and memorandums of service.

The certifying of appearances and proceedings.

The custody of exhibits deposited for inspecting and copying.

The attendance with records and exhibits on the Judges of the Courts, on the Masters in Ordinary, and at assizes or elsewhere.

The inrolment of decrees and orders.

And all other duties heretofore performed by the Six Clerks, Sworn Clerks, or Waiting Clerks, as officers of the court in relation to suits and matters in equity, and not as attorneys, solicitors or agents of the parties in suits or matters in equity.

IV. That the clerks of records and writs shall forthwith provide a seal in such form and bearing such impression as the Lord Chancellor shall approve of, and that any person desirous of suing out any writ which has heretofore been issued out of the Six Clerks' Office, may prepare the same in the present form, or in such other form as the Lord Chancellor may hereafter direct, and may present such writ for sealing to the Clerk of Records and Writs in whose division the cause is, and such writs shall henceforth be open writs, and it shall no longer be necessary for the Lord Chancellor to sign any such writ, and that the Clerk of Records and Writs to whom any such writ shall be presented for sealing, shall thereupon ascertain whether such writ is correct in form, and whether the person presenting the same is, according to the course and practice of the court, entitled to sue out the same, and in case it shall appear that such writ is correct in form, and that the person is entitled to sue out the same, such writ shall be forthwith sealed with such seal as aforesaid, and shall, when so sealed, have the same force and validity as such writ now has when sealed with the Great Seal.

V. That all exceptions for scandal, impertinence, and insufficiency shall be filed with the Clerk of Records and Writs in whose division the cause may be.

VI. That in cases where security for costs has heretofore been directed to be given to a Six Clerk, such security shall be directed to be given to the Clerk of Records and Writs in whose division the cause is.

VII. That pleas, answers, affidavits or affirmations, whereon to ground process of contempt, affidavit or affirmations, required to be annexed to bills, and oaths or affirmations as to the carriage of pleas, answers, examinations or depositions of witnesses, taken before commissioners in the country, may be sworn, affirmed or attested upon honour, before any Clerk of Records and Writs, or before the Clerk of Inrolment in Chancery, as occasion may require, for the better despatch of business.

VIII. That any Clerk of Records and Writs, being required to attend with any record or document at any assizes, or at any court or place out of the Court of Chancery, or the offices thereof, shall be entitled to require that the solicitor, or party desiring such his attendance, shall deposit with him a sufficient sum of money to answer his just fees, charges and expenses in respect of such attendance, and to undertake to pay any further just fees, charges and expenses which may not be fully answered by such deposit.

Taxing Masters.

IX. That the Taxing Masters shall perform all such duties as have heretofore been referred to or performed by the Masters in Ordinary in relation to the taxation of costs; and shall in respect thereof have all such powers and authorities as are now vested in the Masters in Ordinary,

To administer oaths,

To examine witnesses and parties,

To order the production and inspection of books, papers, and documents,

To proceed de die in diem,

To make separate reports and certificates,

To require that any party be represented by a separate solicitor,

And to direct and adopt all such other proceedings as may now be directed and adopted by the Master in Ordinary, on references for the taxation of costs and taking accounts of what is due in respect of such costs and such other accounts connected therewith, as may be directed by the court.

X. That all references for the taxation of costs shall be made to the Taxing Master in rotation; or if there has been any former taxation of costs in the same cause or matter, then to the Taxing Master before whom such former taxation has taken place, either on a reference from the court, or upon the request of a Master in Ordinary.

XI. That all bills of costs, which by any existing Order have been referred for taxation to any Master in Ordinary, who shall not have certified the costs due thereon, before the 28th October instant, are hereby transferred to the Taxing Masters, and shall respectively be taxed by the Taxing Master in rotation; and that if any bills of costs have been proceeded with before the said 28th October instant, the Taxing Master, by whom the same shall be taxed, shall be at liberty to adopt the whole or such part as he shall think fit, of the proceedings which have taken place before the transfer, and may demand and receive for completing such taxation such fees as would have been payable in respect thereof in case such taxation had been continued and completed by the Master in Ordinary, including therein the fees which in such case would have been payable to the clerks in court, for the completion of such taxation, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit.

XII. That in cases where the account of any trustee, executor, administrator, receiver, consignee, or committee, shall consist in part of any bill of costs; and in cases of any proceedings under the 22nd or 23rd of the Orders of the 21st December, 1833, or under the 47th of the Orders of the 26th August, 1841, as amended by the 6th of the Orders of the 11th April, 1842, and in all other cases where, under any General Order, the Master in Ordinary is at liberty to tax the costs of any proceeding before him in respect of any exceptions, or any creditor's charge or otherwise, the Master in Ordinary to whom it may be referred to take such account, or before whom any such proceeding may take place, shall be at liberty to request the Taxing Master in rotation, or the Taxing Master to whom any taxation in the same cause or matter may have been previously referred, to assist him in taxing and settling such bill of costs not being the ordinary costs, on passing such account; and that the Taxing Master, on receiving such request, shall proceed to tax such bill, and shall have the same powers and may receive the same fees in respect thereof as if the same had been referred to him by the court, and shall return the same, with his opinion thereon, to the Master in Ordinary at whose request the same was taxed.

XIII. That if, upon the taxation of any bill of costs, it shall appear to the Taxing Master that for the purpose of duly taxing the same it is necessary to inspect any books, papers, or proceedings relating to the cause or matter which shall be in the office of any Master in Ordinary, the Taxing Master shall be at liberty to request the Master in Ordinary, having any such book, paper, or proceeding in his office, to cause the same to be transmitted to the office of the Taxing Master; and also to request any Master in Ordinary to certify any proceedings in his office, which may be comprised in a bill of costs under taxation; and that in such cases the Master in Ordinary, when, and so soon, and at and for such times as the due transaction of the business in his own office will permit, shall direct such books, papers, and documents to be transmitted to the office of the Taxing Master, for his use during the taxation, and shall certify the proceedings which have taken place in his office, according to the request of the Taxing Master; and that after the costs in respect of which such request of the Taxing Master was made shall have been certified, the Taxing Master shall cause the same books, papers, and documents which have been so transmitted to his office, if then remaining there, to be returned to the office of the Master in Ordinary by whom they were transmitted, unless it shall appear to the Master in Ordinary, and also to the Taxing Master, that any bill of costs forming part of the papers so transmitted ought to be retained by the Taxing Master, in which case the Taxing Master shall take charge of such bill of costs subject to the order of the court.

XIV. That when any paper or document shall be transmitted from the office of a Master in Ordinary to the office of a Taxing Master, an entry of such transmission shall be made in the book of proceedings of the Master in Ordinary, and shall be signed by the Taxing Master or the clerk of the Taxing Master at whose request such paper or document may be transmitted; and that when any such paper or document shall be returned from the office of the Taxing Master to the office of the Master in Ordinary, an entry of such return shall be made in the said book of proceedings, and be signed by the Master in Ordinary or his clerk.

XV. That the Taxing Masters are to be respectively assistant to each other; and that in the discharge of their duties, and for the better despatch of the business of their respective offices, any Taxing Master may tax or assist in the taxation of a bill of costs which has been referred for taxation, and for ascertaining what is due in respect of such costs to any other Taxing Master, and in such case shall certify accordingly.

Solicitors. Parties acting in Person.

XVI. That the solicitors of this court in all cases where the parties sue or defend by solicitors, and the parties themselves in all cases where they sue or defend in person, shall perform all such duties as have heretofore been performed by the sworn clerks and waiting clerks, as, attorneys, solicitors, or agents of the parties in relation to the several matters hereinafter mentioned, viz.

The making out of writs.

The serving and being served with writs, notices, orders, warrants, rules, and other documents, proceedings, and written communications, in causes and matters depending in court.

The signing of elections and agreements to proceed at law or in equity.

The signing of petitions of re-hearing and appeal.

The entering of appearances and consents with the registrar.

The signing of consents to petitions.

The tender and acceptance of costs.

The joining in commission and striking of commissioners' names.

The signing of notices by paupers.

And all other duties heretofore performed by the sworn clerks, and waiting clerks, as attorneys, solicitors, or agents of the parties in suits or matters in equity.

XVII. That every solicitor of a party suing or defending by a solicitor shall cause to be indorsed or written upon every writ which he shall sue out, and upon every information, bill, demurrer, plea, answer, or other pleading or proceeding, and all exceptions, which he may leave with the clerks of records and writs to be filed, and upon all instructions which he may give to the clerks of records and writs for any appearance or other purpose, his name, and place of business, and also (if his place of business shall be more than three miles from the Record and Writ Clerk's Office) another proper place, (to be called his address for service), which shall not be more than three miles from the said office, where writs, notices, orders, warrants, rules, and other documents, proceedings, and written communications, may be left for him, and where any such solicitor shall only be the agent of any other solicitor, he shall add to his own name or firm and place of business the name or firm and place of business of the principal solicitor.

XVIII. That a party suing or defending by a solicitor shall not be at liberty to change his solicitor in any cause or matter without an order of the court for that purpose, which may be obtained by motion or petition, as of course; and that, until such order is obtained and served, and notice thereof given to the Clerk of Records and Writs, the former solicitor shall be considered the solicitor of the party.

XIX. That where the party sues or defends by a solicitor, and no address for service of such solicitor shall have been indorsed or added pursuant to the directions of the 17th Order, all writs, notices, orders, warrants, rules, and other documents, proceedings, and written communications, not requiring personal service upon the party to be affected thereby, and which have heretofore been served upon the sworn clerks or waiting clerks, shall, unless the court shall otherwise direct, be deemed sufficiently served upon the party, if served upon his solicitor at his place of business; but if an address for service of such solicitor shall have been indorsed or added as aforesaid, then all such writs, notices, orders, warrants, rules, and other documents, proceedings, and written communications, shall be deemed sufficiently served upon such party, if left for his solicitor at such address for service.

XX. That every party suing or defending in person shall cause to be indorsed or written upon every writ which he shall sue out, and upon every information, bill, demurrer, plea, answer, or other pleading or proceeding, and all exceptions which he may leave with the Clerks of Records and Writs to be filed, and upon all instructions which he may give to the Clerks of Records and Writs for any appearance or other purpose, his name and place of residence, and also (if his place of residence shall be more than three miles from the Record and Writ Clerks' Office) another proper place, (to be called his address for service), which shall not be more than three miles from the said office, where writs, notices, orders, warrants, rules, and other documents, proceedings, and written communications, may be left for him.

XXI. That where the party sues or defends in person, and no address for service of such party shall have been indorsed or written pursuant to the directions of the 20th Order, and in cases where any party has ceased to have a solicitor, all writs, notices, orders, warrants, rules, and other documents, proceedings, and written communications not requiring personal service upon the party to be affected thereby, and which have heretofore been served upon the sworn clerks, or waiting clerks, shall, unless the court shall otherwise direct, be deemed to be sufficiently served upon the party if served upon him personally, or at his place of residence; but if an address for service of such party shall have been indorsed or added as aforesaid, then all such writs, notices, orders, warrants, rules, and other documents, proceedings, and written communications, shall be deemed sufficiently served upon such party if left for him at such address for service.

XXII. That all writs, notices, orders, warrants, rules, and other documents, proceedings and other written communications, not requiring personal service upon the party to be affected thereby, and which have heretofore been served on the clerks in court or waiting clerks, shall be served before eight o'clock in the evening of the day on which the same shall be served, or otherwise the same shall be deemed to have been served on the next following day excluding Sundays.

XXIII. That when any solicitor or party shall cause an appearance to be entered, or an answer, demurrer, plea, or replication, to be filed, he shall on the same day give notice thereof to the solicitor of the adverse party or to the adverse party himself if he acts in person.

XXIV. That when any exceptions for scandal, impertinence, or insufficiency shall be taken, the solicitor of the party taking the same, or the party himself if he acts in person, shall leave such exceptions at the Record and Writ Clerks' Office to be filed, and shall on the same day give notice of the filing thereof to the solicitor for the adverse party or to the adverse party himself if he acts in person.

XXV. That any solicitor signing any petition of rehearing or appeal, or any consent to a petition or any notice of motion, or any proceeding or application to be made by a pauper, shall thereby become subject to all liabilities to which the sworn clerks have heretofore been subject in respect of such matters.

XXVI. That the solicitor for the party examining any witness before one of the Examiners is to serve the usual notice in writing, containing the name and description of such witness, upon the solicitor or solicitors of the adverse party or parties in the cause.

XXVII. That for the purpose of procuring a guardian, ad litem, to be assigned in court for an infant defendant, the solicitor is to attend the court with the infant and proposed guardian, and request such assignment to be made; and he is to certify to the court that the proposed guardian has no interest adverse to the interest of the infant, and is a proper person to be assigned guardian.

XXVIII. That where, according to the present practice, it has been usual to assign a Six Clerk guardian ad litem of an infant or person of unsound mind, the court may appoint one of the solicitors of the court to be such guardian, and may direct that the costs to be incurred in the performance of the duties of such office, shall be borne and paid, either by the parties or some one or more of the parties to the suit in which such appointment shall be made, or out of any fund in court, in which such infant or person of unsound mind may be interested, and may give directions for the repayment or allowance of such costs as the justice and circumstances of the case may require.

Clerk of Affidavits.

XXIX. That all affidavits and affirmations to be filed in the Affidavit Office may be sworn or affirmed before the clerk of affidavits, who is to receive the proper and usual fees for taking the same, and to pay the amount of the several sums which he may so receive, into the Bank of England, to the account of the Suitors' Fee Fund.

Variation of Orders.

XXX. That the General Order, dated the 12th October 1841, for giving effect to certain provisions in an act passed in the fifth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to make further Provisions for the Administration of Justice," for transferring to this court all suits and matters which on the 15th day of October, 1841, should be depending in her Majesty's Court of Exchequer as a Court of Equity, or under the special authority of any act or acts of parliament, be hereby discharged, and in lieu thereof the following Order be hereby substituted; viz., That as to all records and documents heretofore belonging to the said Court of Exchequer as aforesaid, and not yet brought into the Court of Chancery, the Clerk of Records and Writs, to whose department such suit would belong, shall, upon request of any of the parties, apply for the records and other documents in such suit not before brought into the Court of Chancery. And it is hereby further ordered, that so far as regards the taxation and allowance of costs in any of the suits or matters to be transferred in pursuance of the said act, and which shall not, by any order of this court, be directed to be regulated in that particular by the late practice of the Court of Exchequer, such costs shall be taxed and allowed in manner following, (that is to say) the costs previously to the said 15th October, 1841, shall be taxed and allowed according to the practice of the said Court of Exchequer, and the costs from and inclusive of the said 15th October, shall be taxed and allowed according to the practice of this court.

XXXI. That the 4th of the Orders of the 3rd April, 1828, shall be interpreted as if the same were amended by substituting the word "file" for the word "deliver." That the 20th of the same Orders shall be interpreted as if the same were amended by substituting the word "solicitor," for the words "clerk in court." That the 43rd of the same Orders shall be interpreted as if the same were amended by substituting the words "Record and Writ Clerks' Office," for the words "Six Clerks' Office." That so much and such parts of the 76th of the same Orders, amended by the Orders of the 23rd November, 1831, as relate to the taxation of costs, shall be interpreted as if the same were further amended, by substituting the words "Taxing Master," for the word "Master." That the 2nd of the Orders of the 11th April, 1842, shall be interpreted as if the same were amended by substituting the words "one of the solicitors of this court," for the words "the Senior Six Clerk not towards the cause." And that in like manner where, by reason of the said act of parliament made and passed in the fifth and sixth year of her Majesty, intituled, "An Act for abolishing certain Offices of the High Court of Chancery in England," or of any Orders made in pursuance of the said act, any General Order of the court shall have become inapplicable to the offices and practice of the court, as established by and in pursuance of the said act, such General Order shall be interpreted as if the same were amended, and the directions therein contained were made consistent with the said act of parliament, and the Orders made in pursuance thereof; and that the Registrars of the court and the secretaries of the Master of the Rolls shall, in drawing up all Orders, adapt the language thereof to the alterations made in the practice of the court by the said act of parliament and the Orders made in pursuance thereof.

Fees.

XXXII. That the fees set forth in the first schedule hereto shall be received and taken by the clerk of the inrolments in Chancery, and his clerks, in addition to the fees and sums of money mentioned in the 2nd Order. That the fees set forth in the second schedule hereto, shall be received and taken by the clerks of records and writs, and their clerks. That the fees set forth in the third schedule hereto, shall be received and taken by the Taxing Masters, and their clerks. That the fees set forth in the fourth schedule hereto, shall be received and taken by the clerk of affidavits, and his clerk. That the fees set forth in the fifth schedule hereto, shall be received and taken by the clerks to the Masters in Ordinary, in addition to the other fees received and taken by them. And that the fees set forth in the sixth schedule hereto, shall be received and taken by solicitors for their own use, in addition to the other fees received and taken by them. And that the clerks of records and writs, and the Taxing Masters respectively, may require any of the said fees payable to them respectively, to be paid in advance, or may require a deposit to be paid on account thereof.

XXXIII. That all the fees which are here authorized to be received by the clerk of the inrolments in Chancery, the clerks of records and writs, the Taxing Masters, the clerk of the affidavits, and the clerks of the Masters in Ordinary, shall be by them severally and respectively paid into the Bank of England, in the name of the Accountant-General, to be placed to the credit of the account intituled the "Suits' Fee Fund Account."

XXXIV. That the foregoing Orders shall take effect from and after the 28th October, 1842.

LYNDHURST, C.
LANGDALE, M. R.
LANCELOT SHADWELL, V. C. E.
JAMES WIGRAM, V. C.

ORDERS IN LUNACY,
27TH OCTOBER, 1842.

I, JOHN SINGLETON BARON LYNDHURST, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, intrusted by virtue of her Majesty's sign manual with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, do, in pursuance of an Act of Parliament passed in the sixth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to alter and amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding under Commissions in the Nature of Writs de Lunatico Inquirendo," and for the purpose of making immediate provision for carrying the same into effect, hereby order and direct in manner following, that is to say:—

I. That from and after the first day of Michaelmas Term next, the office of Clerk of the Custodies of Idiots and Lunatics do cease and determine.

II. That all the inquiries and matters connected with the persons and estates of lunatics heretofore usually referred to the Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, (except inquiries under or by virtue of an act made and passed in the first year of the reign of his Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for amending the Laws respecting Conveyances and Transfers of Estates and Funds vested in Trustees and Mortgagees, and for enabling Courts of Equity to give Effect to their Decrees and Orders in certain Cases," and also except where the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time otherwise specially direct), be hereafter referred to the Commissioners in Lunacy for the time being.

III. That all inquiries in lunacy new pending before any of the said Masters (except any inquiries under or by virtue of the said Act of Parliament in the last Order mentioned, and except where otherwise hereafter specially directed) be transferred to the Commissioners in Lunacy.

IV. That all deeds, wills, securities, papers and documents in any lunacy, now left or deposited in the offices of the said Masters, respectively, be delivered to the Commissioners in Lunacy, or to some person by them authorized to receive the same.

V. That until further order, the clerks to the commissioners take and receive for business done in the Commissioners' Office, the like fees to those for the time being receivable by the clerks of the said Masters for the like business, such fees to be accounted for as hereinafter mentioned.

VI. That until further order, all acts, deeds, matters, and things heretofore accustomed to be done in the execution of the Office of Clerk of the Custodies, as to the several matters following, be done by the Commissioners in Lunacy, that is to say:—

Bonds and recognizances of committees and their sureties, and the vacating and delivering up the same; The bill for the grant of the custody, and for the revocation thereof;

Summoning committees and sureties to account;

Filing and copying committees' accounts, and certifying the same.

VII. That until further order, the clerks of the commissioners take and receive for the business so done under the foregoing Order, the like fees to those heretofore received in the Office of Clerk of the Custodies, for the like business, such fees to be accounted for as hereinafter mentioned.

VIII. That until further order, all other acts, deeds, matters, and things, heretofore accustomed to be done in the execution of the Office of Clerk of the Custodies, be (so far as according to the practice for the time being in lunacy the same shall be necessary to be performed) done by the secretary of lunatics; and the secretary of lunatics is to take and receive for the business so done, the like fees to those heretofore received in the Office of Clerk of the Custodies for the like business, such fees to be accounted for as hereinafter mentioned.

IX. That the matter of each lunacy be, for the purpose of the inquiries hereby authorized, considered as referred to the Commissioners in lunacy from the date of the inquisition.

X. That where any person has been or may be found lunatic under any commission, the commissioner do, from time to time, and without any special order in such matter, inquire and report who is or who are the heir or heirs at law and next of kin of the lunatic, and the person or persons who would be entitled to his estate, or to shares thereof under the statutes for the distribution of the intestates' estates, in case he were, at the date of such inquiry, dead intestate, to whom due notice of attending the commissioner is to be given; and also inquire and report what is the situation of the lunatic and the nature of the lunacy, and who is or are the most fit and proper person or persons to be appointed the committee or committees of the person and estate of the lunatic, and of what the fortune of the lunatic did, at the time from which he shall have been found lunatic, consist, and of what it consists at the time of such inquiry, and what is the amount of income arising therefrom, and in what manner, and at what expense, and by whom and where the lunatic has been maintained, and whether anything and what is due, and to whom in respect of such past maintenance, and to whom and out of what fund the same ought to be paid, and what is fit and proper to be allowed for the maintenance and support of the lunatic for the time past and to come, regard being had to the circumstances and estate of the lunatic, and from what time such allowance should commence.

XI. That the commissioner be at liberty immediately after inquisition, and without any special order in the matter, to make inquiry, and to report, whenever it shall seem necessary, upon the provisional care and management of the lunatic, and his property, and as to maintenance, until committees or a committee be appointed.

XII. That the commissioner be at liberty, by certificate under his hand, and without any special order for that purpose, to enlarge from time to time the period within which any person approved of as committee of the estate of any lunatic ought to complete his security.

XIII. That the commissioner be at liberty, without special order, to receive any proposal or conduct any inquiry as to the managing, setting or letting the estate or otherwise respecting the person or property of any lunatic, and may report thereon as he shall see fit; but such report shall be submitted for confirmation, as is now done with respect to such reports when made upon special reference.

XIV. That it shall not be necessary for the committee, or the legal personal representatives of the committee, to obtain a special order in the matter for the taking and passing from time to time his or their accounts, but that such committee or his legal personal representatives, as the case may be, do from time to time, without any special order in the lunacy for that purpose, attend before the commissioner, and have an account of his or their receipts and payments for and on account of the lunatic and his estate taken and passed; and that in taking and passing such accounts, the commissioner make unto the committee, or his legal personal representatives, as the case may be, all just allowances, including an allowance of his and their reasonable and proper costs, charges, and expenses, and those of the next of kin of the lunatic, of passing such accounts.

XV. That the commissioner may, from time to time, determine whether all, or how many, and which of the next of kin or of the heirs of the lunatic, shall (unless at their own costs) attend before him on any proceedings in the lunacy, and that no other of such parties shall be allowed costs out of the estate, unless by special order for that purpose.

XVI. That the commissioner be at liberty from time to time, and at the request of any party or otherwise, to make separate reports, or a separate report, and to state any circumstances as to the subject-matter of the report, specially, as he shall think fit.

XVII. That for the purpose of avoiding, as much as may be, expense and delay in drawing orders in lunacy, no part of the statements in the petition be recited in any order, but only the prayer; and that no part of the commissioner's report be stated in any order except the commissioner's finding or opinion; and that before any order be passed, the original petition or petitions be filed with the secretary of lunatics.

XVIII. That until further order, the fees hereinafter mentioned for the matters following be taken and received by the secretary of lunatics in lieu of the fees now taken and received by him for such matters respectively, videlicet—for every order, 2*l.* 10*s.*; for every duplicate of an order, requiring to be drawn up in Chancery, 10*s.*; for filing every petition, 10*s.*; such fees to be accounted for as hereinafter mentioned.

XIX. That all fees taken and received by the clerks to the commissioners, and by the secretary of lunatics, be once in every month paid into the Bank of England to the credit of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to the account intitled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account;" the amount thereof to be verified by affidavit.

XX. That the foregoing orders take effect on the first day of Michaelmas Term next.

A RECENT decision of the Court of Common Pleas has, in connexion with one almost equally recent of the Court of Exchequer, tended further to elucidate the principles upon which a party is allowed to recover back money which he has paid under a mistake. The leading case upon the subject is Bilbie v. Lumley, (2 East, 469), which establishes the rule, that if a party pays money with a knowledge of the facts that would afford him a defence, he cannot afterwards claim to have it returned. In that case, an underwriter, from whom a material fact had been concealed, paid the insurance money after he had been apprized of the concealment, but not being aware of the legal effect of it. It therefore shews also, that a person mistaking the law, is bound by his act. And, indeed, that distinction is clearly established; although some writers have questioned its soundness. It is derived however from the well-known rule, that every body is presumed to be acquainted with the law. Brisbane v. Dacres (5 Taunt. 143) is to the same effect. And so also is Milnes v. Duncan, (6 B. & C. 671), which case deserves more particular attention on account of the dictum of Bayley, J., whose opinion seemed to be, that if the party had the means of knowledge, he could not recover back the money. In giving judgment, he said, "If a party pay money under a mistake of the law, he cannot recover it back; but if he pay money under a mistake of the real facts, and no laches are imputable to him (in respect of omitting to avail himself of the means of knowledge within his power), he may recover back such money."

In the late cases the effect of means of knowledge has been well considered, on which account we have been induced to notice them.

We may at once dismiss from our consideration the cases in which a person, having the means of knowledge within his power, obviously declines to make any investigation, choosing to pay the money, for in such the mistake is wilful and cannot be taken advantage of. The real question arises where money is paid under a forgetfulness of facts, which were at one time in the knowledge of the party. It will, undoubtedly, be extremely difficult in such cases to ascertain whether the alleged forgetfulness actually existed, and juries ought to be very cautious in coming to that conclusion; but when from the acts of the party at the time, and other unsuspicious evidence, the fact of forgetfulness has been clearly established, it is now settled that the money may be recovered back.

The first case of this kind was Lucas v. Worwick, (1 Moo. & Rob. 293). There the defendant, having received a sum of money from one of the plaintiffs as part of a debt due to him on an account, one item of which was disputed, afterwards met the same plaintiff, and having agreed to give up the disputed item, the latter paid him the balance, but almost immediately afterwards sent the defendant notice, that when he did so he had forgotten that he had already paid the sum on account. The defendant refused to pay the money, and contended, that, as it had been paid voluntarily, and as all the facts were at the time within the knowledge of the party, it could not be recovered back. The court, (the Common Pleas at Lancaster), consisting of Lord Chief Justice Denman and Baron Bolland, after taking time to consider, decided, "That as the jury had in effect found, that the money was paid by mistake in the hurry of business, they were of opinion that it might be recovered back as money had and received to the use of the plaintiff."

It has been attempted to distinguish this case from others on the ground, that the defendant having once received the money, it was contrary to equity and good conscience to seek to keep the second sum; and it has been supposed that the law there laid down would not prevail in cases where money had been paid under forgetfulness to a person who, although not legally entitled to it, had a semblance of equitable right. For instance, a case might be supposed, of a party having neglected to observe some formal legal requisite, receiving money under a forgetfulness on the part of the person paying it of such non-observance. It has been said that Lucas v. Worswick would not then be applicable, and, in short, that the reason of that decision was the unconscientious attempt of the defendant to be paid twice. To an argument of this nature it was however answered by one of the judges, in the case we are about to notice, that it seemed to him, that wherever money was paid under a mistake of fact, and the party would not have paid it if the fact had been known to him, it could not be otherwise than unconscientious to retain it.

The effect, indeed, of the late decisions is, to confine the inquiry to the simple fact whether the defendant had knowledge at the time of making the payment. Thus, in the former of them, Kelly v. Solari, (9 Mee. & W. 54), the plaintiff, as one of the directors of a Life Assurance Company, sought to recover from the defendant a sum of money alleged to have been paid to her by the Company under a mistake of fact. And the circumstances were, that the husband of the defendant, who had effected a policy on his life, died leaving her his executrix, and not having (by mistake) paid the last quarterly premium on the policy. Shortly afterwards, the actuary of the office informed Bates and Clift, two of the directors, that the policy had lapsed by reason of the non-payment of the premium, and Clift thereupon wrote on the policy, in pencil, the word "Lapsed." The defendant having proved her husband's will, applied for the payment of the sum secured upon the policy in question and two others, and Bates and Clift, and a third director, drew a cheque for the amount and handed it to the defendant's agent. The two former stated in evidence that they had at the time of paying the money entirely forgotten that the policy had lapsed. The Lord Chief Baron, before whom the cause was tried, expressed his opinion, "That if the directors had knowledge, or the means of knowledge, of the policy having lapsed, the plaintiff could not recover; and that their afterwards forgetting it would make no difference." He accordingly directed a nonsuit, and a rule having been obtained to set it aside or for a new trial, it was argued that the question was, whether the payment was a voluntary payment with knowledge at the time, and that the doctrine, that means of knowledge are equivalent to knowledge, rested altogether on the dictum of Bayley, J., in Milnes v. Duncan, and was not supported either by the former or subsequent authorities. The court granted a new trial, the Chief Baron saying, he thought "The knowledge of the facts which disentitles a party from recovering, must mean a knowledge existing in the mind at the time of payment;" and Parke, B., that he thought the dictum in Milnes v. Duncan could not be supported in point of law; and with respect to laches, that if money "is paid under the impression of the truth of a fact which is untrue, it may, generally speaking, be recovered back, however careless the party paying may have been, in omitting to use due diligence to inquire into the fact."

According to this decision, therefore, the payment will be good, only where it is made voluntarily and with a knowledge at the time of the facts, or where all inquiry into them is waived, and it is intended that the person receiving shall have the money at all events, whether the facts be true or false. And with respect to unconscientiousness, that in every case except these, it is against conscience to retain the money; for there can hardly be a more favourable state of facts for the party receiving the money than there was in Kelly v. Solari, where the policy had lapsed through a mere mistake. The rule thus adopted by the courts of common law with respect to forgetfulness of facts, is similar to that of the courts of equity as to the notice of incumbrances which will affect a purchaser, who is not bound by notice in a previous transaction which he may have forgotten.

It must not however be supposed that the circumstance of the party who pays the money having at a former time known the facts, or of his having at the time of paying the means of making himself acquainted with them, is immaterial in actions of this nature. It does not, indeed, give to the defendant a legal right to retain the money; but it is matter for strong observation to the jury that they ought thence to infer a knowledge at the time. This was the view taken by the Court of Common Pleas in Bell v. Gardiner, (11 Law Journ. Rep. C. P. 195). The defendant was sued as the maker of a promissory note, and pleaded to the effect that he made the note in consideration of his supposed liability upon a bill of exchange which had been indorsed by him for the accommodation of the drawer, and the date of which had afterwards been altered without his knowledge or consent, and that he made the note believing the bill was in the same state as when he indorsed it. A verdict having been found for him, a motion was made for judgment non obstante verdicto, on the ground that the plea should also have negatived the defendant's means of knowledge, and that ignorance in fact was no answer. Tindal, C. J., in giving judgment, said, "I think the case of Kelly v. Solari is quite conclusive upon the point; and after that decision, I think it must be held, that the circumstance of a party having means of knowledge of a fact which would affect his legal rights, can now only be insisted on as matter of strong observation to a jury, on the question of actual knowledge in point of fact; at the same time, they are not to be told, as a legal principle, that because there may have been means of knowledge, they can by any means be called upon to infer actual knowledge."

It may, therefore, now be considered as settled law, that if a party pays money, believing at the time a fact to be true which is not so, he may recover it back, although he may have formerly known otherwise, or may have the means of knowledge and neglect to avail himself of them.

MASTER IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Henry Minion Hawksworth, of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Leicestershire, Gent., to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

DEATH OF MR. SERJEANT SPANKIE.—This eminent Lawyer, after considerable suffering, expired on Wednesday morning, between six and seven o'clock, at his town residence in Russell-square, Bloomsbury. The learned Serjeant was Counsel to the Honourable East India and other Companies, and was deservedly respected by the whole Bar.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE JURIST.

Sir—I have just read your recent* article as to the terms in which inventors should claim their inventions in the specification of their patents, and particularly so as to any difficulty by reason of the discrepancy which you suppose to exist “between the technical rule and the actual practice of courts of law on this subject.” The right understanding of this matter is of such vital practical importance in this scheming age, that I do not hesitate to trouble you with the following remarks as to the real existence of any such discrepancy—a discrepancy which, if it existed, might be made the ground of endless litigation.

The true solution of your difficulty appears to me to be found in the consideration of the very nature and principle of a patent—the very policy of the Law of Patents. A patent, i. e. the exclusive enjoyment for a certain number of years of the fruits arising from any given new invention or discovery in manufactures or otherwise, is the reward which the Legislature secures to the inventor in return for his communication of the invention or discovery to the public, so that the public may, upon the expiration of his term of exclusive enjoyment, make the article for itself without any restriction; and it is upon this principle that many patents have been held void, because the invention has not been so clearly described in the specification, as that a workman of the particular description of article would be enabled to make it by following such description.

Upon this principle the courts of law have proceeded in holding, as the learned Editor of Jarman's Precedents observes, “that there cannot be a patent for a principle or method unless it is applied to practice, so as to produce a vendible result.” You cannot, in fact, specify the bare principle alone, without shewing how it is to be in some way practically embodied, because you do not comply with the above condition, which alone entitles an inventor to the protection you seek; and further, it may be added, because in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred there is nothing new in the principle itself, but the novelty consists in the mode of application, which must be described.

If, however, the principle of an invention, as distinguished from the particular form in which it may be embodied, is really new, and the form or fabric when complete is also new, then, as observed by Mr. Baron Alderson in Jups v. Pratt, the inventor, who fully describes one form or mode of embodying an application, “may claim protection from all other modes of carrying the same principle into effect;” and this is acted on in practice, for it is the constant habit to express distinctly in specifications, “that the inventor does not confine himself to the particular forms there given as examples.” In short, the courts consider that if you truly describe one mode of applying your invention, you sufficiently comply with the above condition requiring you plainly to communicate your secret to the public, and that you are entitled to the exclusive use of all other modes.

The mere use of the words “claim a principle,” will not therefore vitiate a specification, if the inventor has described the mode of application to which the word principle may be referred, as shewing practically what the particular principle is, and this was decided in Boulton v. Bull, and involved in Lord Lyndhurst's observations in Minter v. Wells.

To illustrate the above remarks, in a case of *Arnott v. Perry, sometime ago before the Vice-Chancellor of England, Dr. Arnott claimed as his invention the application of, what he called, longitudinal elasticity to steel pens, i. e. an elasticity in a line between the nibs and the end of the pen, and which might be imparted by a particular form of steel nib or penholder. He gave, in his specification, certain forms of nibs and holders, exemplifying the invention, but, at the same time, expressly declared, that he did not confine himself to those given forms. The question before the Vice-Chancellor was, whether the defendant's form of nib or pen was a violation of the patent, and, to the best of my recollection, his Honor refused to interfere by injunction, because the existence of any such elasticity in the defendant's pen was imperceptible; and, in fact, he doubted its existence at all; and further, he questioned the novelty of the alleged invention, instancing what had been his own practice when a boy, the cutting of the quill in such a manner as to produce a similar result. However, in this case certainly no one for a moment doubted the accuracy of the terms of the specification, which was framed strictly in accordance with the principles I have laid down.

In conclusion I would only observe, that, except in cases where the exact form is the very essence of the invention, it would be useless for parties to incur the expense of a patent unless they claimed the principle, i. e. the application of the principle in some article of manufacture, as the invention, because the principle may be capable of being applied to various different forms, and if one form only were claimed as the entire invention, the patent might be easily avoided by a simple alteration of form. A BARRISTER.

We have much pleasure in inserting the foregoing observations of our learned correspondent, as we perfectly agree with him that the point is of great practical importance and therefore that it is desirable to ascertain what is the true rule of law upon it. We continue, however, to think, that in laying down as a rule, that, in prudence at least, if not in strictness, a patent should never purport to be in terms for a principle, we have only laid down that which is required by the very guarded language of the cases, and which is almost universally adopted in the practice of drawing specifications.

The cases to which our learned correspondent refers, (Boulton v. Bull and Minter v. Wells, cited ante, p. 329 et seq.), as shewing that a patent may be for a principle, shew, in our humble judgment, no such thing. The language, in the first of those cases, of the Judges who argued for the patent was, that the patent was good, because it was not for a principle. Rooke, J., said, “A new-invented method conveys to my understanding the idea of a new mode of construction. I think these words are tantamount to fire-engines of a newly-invented construction.” And again, “the inventor professes to set forth principles only, but we are to consider, not what he professes to do, but what he has really done; and it is found that he has sufficiently described his invention so as to enable artists to adopt it." And the passage which we quoted from Chief Justice Eyre's argument, (ante, p. 330), is to the same purpose, viz. to shew that the court, in order to support the patent, felt itself bound to construe the word principles as not meaning in that case principles, but a manufacture. The dicta of the Judges in that case, and the subsequent judgment in error in favour of the patent, are authorities therefore, not for the position that if a man invents a principle, and calls it so in his patent, the patent is good, but that if he invents something which is not a principle but a manufacture, and miscalls it a principle, the court will correct his error, and sustain the patent for what it is in reality. In Minter v. Wells Lord Lyndhurst did not say that a patent may be for a principle; nor did he say that the invention in that case was a principle; what he said was, that every invention of such a kind must include the application of some principle; and that the application of the principle constituted "the machine," the invention of which the plaintiff claimed. The specification in that case did not claim in terms the principle, but very carefully, and, as we think, prudently claimed only the application of a certain kind of mechanical combination, whereby mechanical effects of a particular kind were produced, as above described. And it was because the patentee did not claim the principle eo nomine, and only claimed the application of it, or the mechanism constructed so as to involve it, that the patent was supported. Again, in what fell from Mr. Baron Alderson in Jupe v. Pratt, cited by our learned correspondent, the distinction is carefully drawn between a principle simply, and a principle applied to practice, or coupled with a material mode of carrying it into practice. In fact, this distinction is carefully maintained in all the cases, and is grounded on the words of the statute, which require that the subject of a patent shall be a manufacture. Now, a principle is not, and cannot be, a manufacture; but a modus operandi, an embodying of a principle in material combinations, may be a manufacture, and has been constantly held so to be.

* In No. 297, September 17, 1842.

* Not reported.

With regard to the practice of drawing specifications of patents, to which our learned correspondent alludes, we are not aware of any reported case in which the specification of a patent appears to have claimed the principle of the invention in terms, nor have we ever seen a draft prepared under advice, in which that course was pursued. In the case cited by the learned Editor of Jarman's Precedents, vol. 7, p. 555, (Russell v. Cowley), the patentee, so far from specifically claiming the principle of the invention, seems, to our humble judgment, to have most carefully framed his specification so as to avoid that mode of claiming. He described the construction and mode of operating of the apparatus used, and then pointed out that the precise construction of the apparatus might be varied, and stated as a fact, that several variations therein might be made without departing from the principle of the invention, which was so and so, &c. In other words the plan of the specification was precisely that which we have recommended in our former observations, viz. to describe the material means employed, and then indirectly to provide for protection in the application of the principle, by pointing out what is the distinctive property of the particular combination of material means described, and to claim the material means possessing or embodying such aforesaid property or principle.

We trust that we have now shewn that the distinction for which we contend is warranted by the language of the authorities, and with these observations we will leave the point for the consideration of our learned readers.

Rebittus.

The Law of Nisi Prius, Evidence in Civil Actions, and Arbitration and Awards; with an Appendix of the New Rules, the Statutes of Set-off, Interpleader, and Limitation, and the Decisions thereon. By ARCHIBALD JOHN STEPHENS, Barrister at Law. In 3 vols.

[Longman & Co. 1842.]

Such is the title of a voluminous work, containing nearly three thousand pages, which has made its appearance within the last fortnight, having been preceded by a very copious and promising table of contents. Its object is, as the preface informs us, "to supply the legal profession with a practical treatise, not only upon the law of Nisi Prius, but also upon the subjects of evidence in civil actions, and arbitration and awards." Having before us the excellent treatise of Mr. Selwyn on Nisi Prius law, as well as the productions of Mr. Leigh and Messrs. Harrison & Edwards; those of Mr. Phillips and Mr. Starkie on the Law of Evidence; the treatises of Messrs. Watson and others on the Law of Arbitration, together with the leading books of practice which deal with the same subject, we waited with some anxiety the publication of this work, to see in what respect the author had improved upon these so as to benefit the profession, and afford a quid pro quo for the large sum at which it is published. We are not ignorant or unmindful of the vast amount of labour which must have been expended in order to get up even such a compilation as this, and we are far from being disposed to underrate the author's merits, or to deprecate his production. But, disappointed as we have been with it, we feel it due to the profession to state our opinion fairly and honestly.

The first impression which must strike the reader is, that the work is as unlike a treatise as can well be imagined. We have sought in vain, from the beginning to the end, for a single paragraph containing the rationale of a point—a single line evidencing the application of mind, or the exercise of the reasoning powers. The author does not discuss—he does not even state a proposition, except in the language of the reports or of a contemporary writer. He has contented himself with merely stringing together a list of cases, bearing, or seeming to bear, in some way or other, on the subject which forms the head of the chapter, interspersing them here and there with an extract from some text-writer; and frequently with a lengthy judgment taken from the reports. We hardly know what to call the book; in many respects it resembles Bacon's Abridgment, but, perhaps, the more correct way to describe it is as an expansion of Harrison's Index. The language of Dr. Story forces itself upon one's mind, while perusing this, and, unfortunately, many other publications of the present day. "There is," says the Dr. "a remarkable difference in the manner of treating judicial subjects between foreign and English jurists. The former almost universally discuss every subject with an elaborate, theoretical fulness and accuracy, and ascend to the element-ry principle of every branch of the science. The latter, with few exceptions, write what they are pleased to call Practical Treatises, which contain little more than a collection of the principles laid down in the adjudged cases, with scarcely an attempt to illustrate them by any general reasoning, or even to follow them out into collateral consequences. In short, these treatises are but little more than full indexes to the reports, arranged under appropriate heads; and the materials are often tied together with very slender threads of connection. They are better adapted to those to whom the science is familiar than to instruct others in its elements." The work before us, we regret to say, is not adapted to either. The fault we have noticed is not the only one. Like the indexes themselves, the arrangement is untechnical and injudicious; and though the matter sought for may, most likely, be found somewhere in the book, no one can tell where to alight on a particular point, much less on a particular case, except so far as he is informed as to the latter by the list of cases appended to the work. Who, for example, would think of looking for the following cases under the head of Trover?

"Upon a contract for the sale of an estate, the titles and abstracts to be made at the vendor's expense, the purchaser is entitled to the custody of the abstract, until either the purchase is finally rescinded by consent, or declared impracticable by a court of equity; and when the contract is determined, the abstract becomes the property of the vendor. If the sale proceed, the abstract is the property of the vendee; but an opinion written thereon on the seller's paper by his own consent, continues to be his property. (Roberts v. Wyatt, 2 Taunt. 268)." Vol. 3, p. 2662.

"Bills of exchange indorsed to an agent of the plaintiff or order for their account, and deposited with the defendants by such agent as a security for future advances, may be recovered by the plaintiffs in an action of trover. (Trottel v. Borandon, 1 Moore, 543)." Ib.

"A calico printer is entitled, after he has discharged his head colourman, to the book in which the servant has entered the processes for drying colours during his service, although many of the processes were the invention of the head colourman himself. (Makepeace v. Johnson, 4 Taunt. 770)." Id. p. 2663.

Yet these are inserted for the purpose of shewing for what "property trover can or cannot be maintained"!!!

And under the title "pleading" in actions on the case, is this paragraph:

"The circumstance of a dog being of a ferocious disposition, and being at large, is not sufficient to justify shooting him; to justify such a course, the animal must be actually attacking the party at the time." Vol. 2, p. 1025.

Had the author styled his production an index, we should perhaps have been content with assigning to him the negative merit of not being worse than his predecessors; and have merely condemned his judgment for placing cases illustrative of the law of vendor and purchaser, principal and agent &c. &c., under the head of trover, merely because the questions happened to arise in that form of action. It is the office of an index to record all the decisions, and no person thinks his own case secure, because he finds an analogous one there; he looks further to see if that has been overruled by a later decision, or its doctrine repealed by a subsequent statute. Now another and a serious fault of the work before us is, that, like an index, it mentions all the cases and describes them in pretty nearly the same way, viz. by the side-note, but without any intimation that this or that is no longer law; while, by the pretensions of its title, it leads the reader to suppose that those he finds there are of standing authority.

In treating of the action of assumpsit, the author says,

"Assumpsit is generally the only remedy against an executor or administrator for the breach of a contract 'not under seal which was made with him;' referring to Quick v. Staines, (1 B. & P. 293). That was an action of trover, and the question to be decided was, whether an executrix who had used the goods of her testator as her own, and afterwards married, still treating them as hers, could object to their being taken in execution for a debt of her husband's; and the court held they were liable so to be taken. If the author meant to express the well-known rule that assumpsit will not lie upon a contract by deed, and that a special contract not under seal must be sued on in assumpsit, he need not have so qualified it; if on the other hand he meant, as we suspect he did, that the action of debt on simple contract will not lie against an executor, he must have forgotten the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 14, by which such action is expressly given.

Again, under the head "Trover," we find that

"In trover the defendant cannot be helden to bail 'without a judge's order.' The same is said as to the action of detinue. (Vol. 2, p. 1314). And, referring to the action of ejectment,

"The defendant cannot be helden to bail as of course, but an application must be made for a judge's order 'for that purpose, which however is seldom denied!!'" (Vol. 2, p. 1497)—expressions taken from some old editions of books of practice, published before the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 was thought of.

To enumerate one-half of the examples of what we cannot but term gross and unpardonable blunders, which have caught our notice during a cursory glance at the work, would occupy a volume. At every page the reader will find instances such as these:—

"It is sometimes inexpedient to declare in assumpsit," (against a carrier for negligence), "because a set-off and bankruptcy can be pleaded." (Vol. 2, p. 991).

"An attorney cannot be a lessor in ejectment." (p. 1384).

"If a husband be sued in assumpsit for articles supplied to his wife, and he intends to defend the action 'as to part only, it seems that the proper plea is, that he is not liable beyond a certain amount, which sum he should pay into court'!!! (Vol. 1, p. 749).

Again, under the word "assumpsit,"

"A vendor can maintain an action against a vendee for goods sold and delivered, after delivery, provided such delivery be either actual or constructive. Where A. let a horse on hire to B. for one month, B. kept it for two months, and then sold it to C. It was held that A. might recover the value of the horse from C., although C. had acted bonâ fide, and had paid A. the full value." (Shelly v. Ford, 5 C. & P. 373). (Vol. 1, p. 279).

This was an action on the case, charging the defendant with selling the plaintiff's horse, which had been let on hire to another, and thus injuring his reversionary interest; and the point decided was, that a party who had only a limited interest in a chattel could not convey a greater interest to another!!

We will not weary our readers with further extracts. Whoever will take the trouble to cut open and run his eye over Mr. Stephens' pages, will be satisfied that we have not unfairly selected those we have given. They are but a few out of some hundreds which we noted in the course of the time spent in going through the work. The author seems indeed to have cared for nothing but the making a large and expensive book; and this he has done with the aid of side-notes frequently substantially than the text, of judgments at length, when a couple of lines would have answered every purpose, and by inserting every case, ancient and modern, without regard to its value or authority at the present day. It is in truth a miserable production.

A Treatise on the Thellusson Act, &c. By JOHN F. HARGRAVE, Esq., M.A., Barrister at Law. [Sweet.]

That the love of power is the dominant passion of the English mind can hardly we think be doubted. It breathes in every political, in every social institution. It manifests itself in our political existence in the impatience of all political control, except that which we impose on ourselves; for let men disguise it as they will, the love of political independence is but the desire of personal importance, in other words, a modification of the love of power. It shews itself in our laws, in the unlimited power of disposition which is given to a testator over the property of which he may die possessed; and it shews itself in our habits, in the great tendency which is found to exist among us, not only to accumulate property while living, but to create future great fortunes and powerful families, after we ourselves shall have been long withdrawn from the enjoyment of the world and its gifts.

Let us look at that vast head of judicial inquiry involving the discussion of testamentary dispositions, and what an enormous mass of the litigation of this country do we not find springing out of the almost universal desire of men, to stretch forth the grasp of their will over the property they shall leave behind them, in the greatest number of directions, and for the longest period possible! Men cloak to themselves the true source of this their great fondness for dictating to posterity, under the idea that they are governed by a wise and benevolent wish to provide in the most prudent manner for children and other relatives, forgetting that prudent disposition of property is but a relative term, the prudence of any disposition depending on the particular set of circumstances with which the disposing party is surrounded; and that, therefore, to attempt the exercise of direction over property for any lengthened period after the person so directing shall have been withdrawn from the opportunity of personally witnessing the changes of external circumstances, is but a naked and foolish exercise of arbitrary power.

But of all the attempts to gratify this love of power, the least founded on any principle of justice or utility, are in general those which purport to produce at a remote period from the death of the testator a future fortune for some person, of vast amount, by withdrawing in the interval from the family of the testator, and from society generally, all enjoyment of the property bequeathed; in other words, those attempts at accumulation, which, before the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98, (the Thellusson Act), were so prevalent, and which are still not wholly out of fashion.

The theory of accumulation is very simple. It is in fact but the formation of capital, by reserving instead of consuming some portion of the property which a person has by his labour acquired. So long as the accumulation bears a due proportion to the extent of those operations in conducting the creation of property, which require vast immediate outlay with only postponed returns, it is clearly beneficial in a civilized community. But whenever that due proportion is exceeded, whenever the accumulation is dictated, not by the desire to meet the demand for active capital, but by the desire of simply creating inordinate power at some unseen period, so often, we apprehend, may it be pronounced to be simply unjust and pernicious. But then the question is, how is it to be discovered, and to whom is it to be trusted to fix what is this due proportion between accumulation and the legitimate demands for it? We apprehend the answer is this: that, while accumulation is conducted by the party himself destined, or at least intending to enjoy its results, the natural disposition of men to enjoy the results of property will offer a sufficient counterbalance to their love of acquiring power; but when the check offered by the desire of personal enjoyment is withdrawn, as it is in the case of all posthumous accumulations, the equilibrium of motives is destroyed; for what is there to limit the greediness of a fanciful and morbid love of power, when it can gratify itself by enjoying power separated from all responsibility?

We should come therefore to the conclusion, that in restricting posthumous accumulation, the Legislature has not yet gone far enough, and that the only politic rule, if indeed it be necessary that any legislative rule should intervene, would be to prohibit all posthumous accumulation whatever. On what principle, indeed, the Legislature has thought fit to prevent accumulation for lives, viz. for a period which, though it may extend to the longest period of which the life of man is susceptible, is still uncertain, and may expire within one year; while it has at the same time thought fit to permit accumulation for (among other periods) a certain period of twenty-one years, it is impossible to imagine. The reason suggested by Mr. Preston for this portion of the act (Abet. vol. 2, p. 180) "that this period seems to have been allowed by the Legislature, merely in order to take away the encouragement of giving to an infant rather than to an adult," seems to attribute a curiously small extent of calculation to the Legislature, if its intention was really to prevent mischievous accumulation; because it is clear that any certain accumulation for twenty-one years must be more mischievous than an uncertain one depending on any one or even two or three infant lives. In fact, what the Legislature appears to have done is this: It found a very pernicious practice sanctioned by the law, and without examining whether the vice of the practice was in its quality or in its quantity, it simply cut down the quantity, and that by a statute so hastily and obscurely worded, as to have become the mark for judicial sarcasm in nearly every case in which it has been discussed.

We have been led into these remarks by the perusal of a short but able treatise on the Thellusson Act, in which, combined with an elaborate survey of the authorities on the construction of that act, we have met with many sound and philosophical observations on the general effect of accumulation, and the policy of supporting it.

The author commences his essay by a brief history of the famous Thellusson will, and the prolonged course of forensic investigation which terminated in a declaration that it was not contrary to law; a termination which it seems now not a little surprising should ever have been thought doubtful. Mr. Thellusson's will, so far as regarded the question of accumulation, went, in fact, to this extent and no further: that it was a trust to terminate on the expiration of a certain human life; in other words, it was a trust for a life in being, because a trust to determine on the expiration of the survivor of several lives; is, after all, a trust to determine on the expiration of some one life. How then could it be for a moment supposed that Mr. Thellusson transgressed the law, because, instead of trusting to a single life, or two or three lives, in order to insure a lengthened period for the duration of the trust, he had, on the principle of insurance, attempted to obtain a greater certainty of length of time by including a very considerable number of cestuis que vie to support his trust? That any man had then any doubt upon the point, can only be now attributed to some perverted state of the judgment, which the terrific anticipation of the political effect of the will would produce in the minds of those who had to consider its legal qualities.

That those terrific anticipations and the inordinate hopes of the testator were alike groundless, appears pretty clearly from the statements extracted by Mr. Hargrave from the proceedings which took place before the House of Lords on the occasion of introducing the private act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. xxvii., for enabling the trustees of the Thellusson estates to demise them to Lord Rendlesham. From these statements it appears, that the accumulation in 1833 fell very short indeed of the sum which upon calculation it was originally supposed it would be, the cause of the discrepancy being explained by the fact of more than 120,000*l.* having been gradually expended during a period of about thirty years, in litigation and the expense of collecting the rents*.

The effect, however, of the decision in support of Mr. Thellusson's will was, as is well known, an impetus to what Mr. Hargrave happily terms "the mania accumulandi, or sinking-fund enthusiasm," which led to some most extravagant attempts; among others, to an attempt to create a trust for accumulation "until the death of the last survivor of all the members of the posterage" living at the testator's own decease. (See p. 36).

"To prevent settlors so completely on the alert," says Mr. Hargrave, p. 37, "from thus availing themselves of the defects in the law, the legislature interposed with the statute now about to be considered. Its chief aim undoubtedly was, to restrain accumulation, whether directed by settlement or by will, if directed solely for the purpose of swelling the bulk of the original property, as in Mr. Thellusson's case, from extending to the duration grasped by that testator. Unfortunately, however, owing probably to the urgent necessity for immediate legislative interference, and to the impossibility of giving the statute retrospective effect upon instruments containing these dispositions, otherwise than to the extent provided by the 4th section, the bill passed through both houses of parliament in a very hurried manner. Hence have arisen in no common degree obscurity and inaccuracy, the usual accompaniments, and attempted evasion and litigation, the usual consequences, of hasty legislation. The 1st and 2nd sects. especially have been often the subjects of forensic discussion. And the act itself has scarcely ever been mentioned in our courts, either of law or of equity, and whether in arguments of counsel or in judgments from the bench, without giving occasion to remarks on the inaccurate and indefinite language in which its provisions are expressed."

Passing from this portion of the subject on which Mr. Hargrave has touched, as was proper in a practical treatise, but briefly, we come to the principal portion of his work, which is devoted to an examination of the authorities on the existing state of the law of trusts for accumulation, and in this we find that he has adopted the very useful, though somewhat unusual and bold plan of stating the result of the different classes of authorities, in the form of a general rule or proposition. Thus, for instance, after stating and commenting on the great case of Shaw v. Rhodes, (1 Myl. & C. 135), in reference to the question whether a charge not actually directed to be raised by accumulation, but which cannot de facto be raised without accumulation, is within the act, he concludes, p. 90, "That in what proportion soever or after what deduction soever the current income of the trust property is in substance and effect directed to be laid up and invested until a future time, and is not beneficially enjoyed de anno in annum by some person or other; in the same proportion and to the same extent, an accumulation and postponed enjoyment in its nature within the act must be carried on by the trustees, subjecting the trust to the restraints of the act."

We will now, with the parting general observation, that the author has treated his very difficult subject with much learning and acuteness, take leave of him, concluding these remarks by citing his argument in support of the position, that a testator is not restricted to one only of the four periods of accumulation fixed by the statute, but may combine two or more.

"I have hitherto," he says, "assumed, that a settlor or testator may adopt two or more of these periods: for instance, that he may combine in one instrument the following distinct and successive trusts for accumulations, viz. one during his own life, another commencing on his own decease, and continuing during either an absolute term of twenty-one years or the minority of a person in esse at his own decease, and a third arising, if the person beneficially entitled at the end of the second period should then be under age, and continuing during the minority of such person, and so on during the minorities of the beneficial takers, to any period within the rule against perpetuities. In this assumption I have adopted Mr. Preston's opinion*. But it should be stated that Mr. Jarman is of a different opinion†. He considers that all such combinations are illegal, and that 'the act has conferred on settlors or testators, (or rather restrained them to), the option of selecting one only of the designated periods.' He founds this opinion first upon the words of the act; secondly, upon the judgment or rather the remarks of Lord Eldon in Griffiths v. Vere, (9 Ves. 127).

"The only disjunctive word favouring this opinion is the word 'or,' repeated between the four clauses just considered. But much stress can scarcely be laid upon the use of this word, for it was impossible to enumerate these four periods without using this conjunction, which seems to the author to be 'or' distributive rather than 'or' disjunctive; more especially as several of these periods are concurrent. If it had been the intention of the Legislature to impose this additional restraint, it seems scarcely possible that some words more strictly distributive would have been omitted‡. This omission having undoubtedly left the statute open to the more liberal construction, and the statute being in restraint of a right, the balance of argument on the words of the act seems to be considerably in favour of the opinion I have adopted. With respect to Lord Eldon's observations in Griffiths v. Vere, which have been in part already quoted, and which are referred to by Mr. Jarman, as evidently indicating that his Lordship did not consider the statute directly to authorize trusts for accumulation, extending over more than one of the statutory periods, if we give those observations the greatest possible weight, they can scarcely be considered as even entitled to the weight of a dictum on the point. From the facts of the case itself, the point certainly would not be suggested to the court. And, although in Lord Eldon's judgment there seems no hesitation in suggesting difficulties, or reluctance to point out ambiguities in an act, which, it is well known, had not received his Lordship's support in its progress through the Legislature, yet the more attentively his Lordship's learned criticisms are considered, the less distinct appears the reference even to the existence of this doubt; and Mr. Jarman certainly (so far as I am aware) was the first who expressly called attention to it. With respect to the cases in support of either Mr. Preston's or Mr. Jarman's opinion, although I cannot find that in any of them more than one of the statutory periods has been adopted, and am not aware of any judicial dictum expressly on the point, yet all the decisions indirectly lend great support to the liberal construction. In the first place, if the statute does not authorize an accumulation extending over more than one of the above periods, can it be said to authorize the adoption of measures of the duration of accumulation not mentioned at all? How could such a disposition as was before the court in Bacon v. Proctor (1 T. & R. 31) have been supported, where the settlor had adopted as the measure of the accumulation the raising of a certain specified sum of money? Or again, how could the court have supported, even pro tanto, an accumulation during the life of a person other than the grantor or settlor, as was done in Griffiths v. Vere, (9 Ves. 127), in the second accumulation in Shaw v. Rhodes, (1 My. & C. 135), O'Neill v. Lucas, (2 Kee. 313), and Eyre v. Marsden, (2 Kee. 564)? Or, in short, if the act be strictly distributive, how could any accumulation be supported which does not adopt one or other of the designated periods? All the cases clearly establish, that the act authorizes the adoption of other measures of duration than those specified; and consequently, that the four designated periods are not in strictness distributive, otherwise they would have been held exclusive. In the second place, it must be admitted that Mr. Preston is beyond question in the right to a certain extent, for the cases which will be considered in the next chapter establish, that, if a settlor adopt all four of the periods allowed by the act, they will be valid to all intents and purposes, provided they do not in effect endure beyond twenty-one years from the testator's decease; for the nullifying operation of the act will be found not to commence in any case until that period. And in the third and last place it should be noticed, that, in the oft-quoted case of Shaw v. Rhodes, every judge must have assumed, that, in a disposition containing several distinct trusts for accumulation, the validity of every accumulation after the first would be wholly unaffected by the fact of the settlor's having already exercised his right of accumulation, and that all must stand or fall, according as they were protected or not, by some one of the four clauses in the first section; or exempted altogether from the act, by coming within one of the three exceptions contained in the second section."

‡ Declaring also which period in a settlement or will should be void, where two or more periods are used.

* According to calculation, it seems that in 1828, the accumulated fund ought to have been 2,400,000*l.* (See Hargr., p. 26). It was really scarcely more than one million.

Regulæ Generales.

RULES AND ORDERS MADE UNDER THE STAT. 5 & 6 VICT. c. 116, INTITULED "AN ACT FOR THE RELIEF OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS," Nov. 1, 1842.

It is ordered—

I. That every petition for protection from process under the statute passed in the Parliament holden in the 5th and 6th years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors," shall be taken to the Chief Registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy in Basinghall-street, or to the deputy-registrar of the district court of bankruptcy in the country, (as the case may be in London or in the country), between the hours of 11 in the forenoon and 2 in the afternoon, who shall file and number such petition; and such chief or deputy registrar shall thereupon allot such petition by ballot, or in relation, to one of the Commissioners in London, or of the district court in the country, (where there are two commissioners), and shall forthwith certify to such commissioner the filing of such petition, and such allotment to him, which certificate shall be filed with the proceedings in the matter of such petition, and such petition shall be prosecuted before such commissioner, or before the district commissioner, where there is only one commissioner; provided always, that any one commissioner in London or the country may, in the absence of any other commissioner, act for him.

II. That every such petition shall be, as far as the case will admit, in the form set forth in the schedule marked A, No. 1, annexed to these Orders.

III. That the schedule required by the said act to be annexed to such petition shall be annexed at the time of filing such petition, and shall be, mutatis mutandis, in the form now in use in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors.

IV. That each sheet of such petition and schedule shall be signed by the petitioner, in the presence of, and shall be attested by, his attorney.

V. That every petitioner shall, immediately after an official assignee shall have been nominated in pursuance of the provisions of the said act, deliver over to the official assignee appointed to his estate all monies, bills, notes, securities, and other personal estate of such petitioner, in his possession or power, together with all books of account, papers, and writings, relating to his estate and effects.

VI. That the protection from process to be given to any petitioner upon filing his petition shall be called the "Interim Order for Protection," and shall be in the form set forth in the schedule marked A, No. 2, annexed to these Orders.

VII. That the time for hearing the matter of such petition shall be appointed by the commissioner acting in the same, such time not to be less than five or exceeding eight weeks from the date of the advertisement of the intention to petition required by the aforesaid statute, and such commissioner shall cause it to be advertised in the form set forth in the schedule marked B, No. 1, annexed to these Orders, in the London Gazette, and in one newspaper circulating within the county in which the petitioner resides, three clear days at least before the day appointed for such sitting.

VIII. That the time for making a final order, unless cause be shewn to the contrary, in the matter of such petition, shall be appointed by the commissioner acting in the same; of which time the commissioner shall cause notice to be given ten days, at least, before the time appointed, which notice shall be by advertisement in the form set forth in the schedule marked B, No. 2, annexed to these Orders.

IX. That the final order shall be in the form set forth in the schedule marked A, No. 3, annexed to these Orders, and shall be made in duplicate, one copy to be filed with the proceedings, and one copy to be delivered to the petitioner.

X. That all bills of fees and disbursements of any attorney or messenger for business done under the aforesaid act shall be taxed by the court in which the petition shall have been filed.

XI. That, until further order, the mode of taking possession of the estate and effects of such petitioner, the mode of realizing the same, and of depositing the produce thereof, together with the mode of keeping and examining the accounts of the official and other assignees, and all forms of proceedings under the said act not herein specially provided for, be, mutatis mutandis, in conformity with the like forms and proceedings in bankruptcy.

SCHEDULE A—No. 1.

Petition for Protection under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116.

To the Court of Bankruptcy, or To the — District Court of Bankruptcy.

The humble-petition of —, of —, in the — of —

[Insert, at full length, the name, address, description, and quality of the petitioner.]

Sheweth, That your petitioner is not a trader within the meaning of the statutes now in force relating to bankrupts. [If a trader, strike out the word "not," and add after the word "bankrupts" the words "but owing debts amounting in the whole to less than 300l."]

That your petitioner has resided twelve months within the district of this honourable court; that is to say, [Insert the places and periods of residence.]

That your petitioner has become indebted, without any fraud, or gross or culpable negligence, to divers creditors, whose names are inserted in the schedule marked — to this his petition annexed.

That your petitioner has given notice to one-fourth in number and value of such creditors (that is to say, to the several creditors to whose names the word "notice" is annexed in the said schedule) of his intention to present this petition, and has caused notice thereof to be inserted twice in the London Gazette; that is to say, on — the — day of —, and — the — day of — last; and twice in the — newspaper; that is to say, on — the — day of —, and — the — day of — last, as by the said Gazette and newspapers will appear.

That the schedules marked respectively — to this petition annexed contain a full and true account of your petitioner's debts, with the names of his creditors, and the dates of contracting the debts severally, the nature of the debt and the security (if any) given for the same, and also of the nature and amount of his property, and of the debts owing to him, with their dates, and the names of his debtors, and the nature of the securities (if any) which he has for such debts.

That your petitioner, being unable to pay and satisfy such debts, is desirous that his estate should be administered under the protection and direction of this honourable court; for the more readily effecting which, your petitioner submits to this honourable court the proposal contained in the schedule marked — to this petition annexed. [Strike out these words from the words "for the more" to the words "petition annexed," when there is no special proposal.]

That your petitioner is ready and willing to be examined from time to time touching his estate and effects, and to make a full and true disclosure and discovery of the same.

Your petitioner, therefore, prays that your petitioner may be protected from all process whatever, either against his person or his property of every description; and that your petitioner may have such further and other relief as by the statute made in the parliament holden in the 5 & 6 Vict., intituled "An Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors," is provided, and this honourable court shall think fit.

And your petitioner shall ever pray &c. &c.

Signed by the said petitioner on the — day of — 184—, in the presence of — in the — of — his attorney in the matter of the said petition.

The Schedule of —

I, the said —, do declare That this my schedule doth contain a full and fair description of me, as to my name or names, trade or trades, profession or professions, together with my last usual place of abode, and the place or places where I have resided during the time when my debts were contracted, and also a full and true description of all debts due or growing due from me at the time of presenting my petition, and of all and every person and persons to whom I am indebted, or who to my knowledge or belief claim to be my creditors, together with the nature and amount of such debts and claims respectively, and the dates of contracting the debts severally, and the security given for the same, distinguishing such as are admitted from such as are disputed by me, and also a full, true, and perfect account of all my estate and effects, real and personal, in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, and also of all places of benefit or advantage held by me, whether the emoluments of the same arise from fixed salaries, or from fees or otherwise, and also of all pensions or allowances which I have in possession or reversion, or which are held by any other person or persons for me, or on my behalf, or of and from which I derive or may derive any manner of benefit or advantage, and also of all rights and powers of any nature and kind whatsoever, which I am, or any other person or persons in trust for me, or for my use, benefit, or advantage, in any manner whatsoever, seized or possessed of, or interested in or entitled unto, or which I or any other person or persons in trust for me or for my benefit have any power to dispose of, charge, or exercise for my benefit or advantage, together with a full, true, and perfect account of all the debts due, or growing due, at the time of making the said order to me, or to any person or persons in trust for me, or for my benefit or advantage, either solely or jointly with any other person or persons, with their dates, and the names and places of abode of the several persons from whom such debts are due or growing due, and of the witnesses who can prove such debts so far as I can set forth the same, and the nature of the security which I have for any such debts; and that this my schedule doth also contain a balance sheet of so much of my receipts and expenditures, and of the items composing the same, as is required by this honourable court in that behalf; and doth fully and truly describe the wearing apparel, bedding, and other such necessities of myself and my family, and my working tools and implements.

Witness my hand, the — day of —, 184—.

Signed in the presence of —. — Attorney.

Balance Sheet of Receipts and Expenditures.

The court requires

That this account shall in no case begin later than six calendar months before the presenting of the petition.

That if before that period, but since the commencement of his present embarrassments, any property has gone away from him by sale, assignment, mortgage, distress, execution, or any means other than the ordinary course of trade, the account shall commence so as to include all such ordinary transactions.

† That the blanks in the description of the debtor side of the account shall be filled with a date early enough for compliance with the above directions.

That the specific appropriation of each sum received shall be separately shewn, where the case admits of it.

That the date of each item in the account shall be given by stating the day as well as the year where the same can be ascertained.

That money and other property, which was in possession of the insolvent or his family, or of any other person for his or their benefit, at the time when he presented his petition, shall, in all cases, be made a specific item or items in the account.

NEW COURTS OF BANKRUPTCY.

The following Order in Council appeared in last night's Gazette:—Whereas by a statute, made at the Parliament holden in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled, "An Act for the Amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy," it was enacted, amongst other things, that it should be lawful for Her Majesty, after the passing of that act, by a commission or commissions under the Great Seal, to appoint as many persons as her Majesty should think fit, not exceeding twelve persons, being serjeants, or barristers at law, of not less than seven years' standing at the bar, to be Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy, in addition to the present Commissioners of the said court, to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country; and that any one or more of such additional commissioners should and might form a District Court of Bankruptcy, for the purpose of the said act; and that every such court should be authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country, at such place, and in and for such district, as her Majesty, with the advice of her Privy Council, should be pleased to direct ; and that it should be lawful for her Majesty, with the advice aforesaid, to describe and, from time to time, to alter the limit and extent of every such district as to her Majesty should seem fit : and whereas her Majesty has appointed twelve additional Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country, and it is expedient to settle the districts in and for which such commissioners shall so act, and to describe the limit and extent of every such district ; her Majesty is therefore pleased, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order and direct, and it is hereby ordered and directed, that, for the purpose of the said recited act, there shall be seven districts in the country, and that such several districts shall be called respectively by the names following, that is to say,

The Manchester District,
The Leeds District,
The Liverpool District,
The Birmingham District,
The Bristol District,
The Exeter District, and
The Newcastle-upon-Tyne District.

And it is hereby further ordered and directed, that district courts of bankruptcy shall be authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country, in and for such several districts, at the several places hereinafter in that behalf mentioned, that is to say,

In and for the Manchester District—at Manchester.

In and for the Leeds District—at Leeds.

In and for the Liverpool District—at Liverpool.

In and for the Birmingham District—at Birmingham.

In and for the Bristol District—at Bristol.

In and for the Exeter District—at Exeter.

In and for the Newcastle-upon-Tyne District—at Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

And it is hereby further ordered and directed, that the limit and extent of such several districts, for the purpose of the said recited act, shall be as hereinafter described, that is to say, Manchester District.

The Manchester District shall comprehend all places included within, or to be considered as forming parts of, the northern division of the county of Chester, as the same is settled and described by a statute made at the Parliament holden in the second and third years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intitled "An Act to settle and describe the Divisions of Counties, and the Limits of Cities and Boroughs, in England and Wales, in so far as respects the Election of Members to serve in Parliament;" and all places included within, or to be considered as forming parts of, the northern division of the county of Derby, as the same is settled and described by the said last-mentioned act; and the following places in the county of Lancaster, that is to say,—Blackburn, Clitheroe, Lancaster, Preston, Ashton-under-Lyne, Bolton-le-Moors, Bury, Manchester, Oldham, Rochdale, Salford, Warrington, and Wigan; and also all other places locally situated in the said county of Lancaster, and which are on the eastern side of any of the several railways hereinafter mentioned, and commonly understood by the following names, that is to say,

The Grand Junction Railway,
The North Union Railway, and

The Lancaster and Preston Junction Railway; or which are northward, eastward, or westward of Lancaster aforesaid, or westward or northward of the river Lune.

And it is hereby further ordered and directed, that the several places, in the said county of Lancaster hereinafter expressly named, shall include the place or places respectively which are comprehended within the boundaries of every such place, as such boundaries are settled and described by the said last-mentioned act.

Leeds District.

The Leeds District shall comprehend all places locally situated in the county of York; and all places included within, or to be considered as forming parts of, the northern division of the county of Nottingham, as the same is settled and described by the said last-mentioned act; and all places locally situated in the parts of Lindsey, in the county of Lincoln.

Liverpool District.

The Liverpool District shall comprehend all places included within, or to be considered as forming parts of, the southern division of the county of Chester, as the same is settled and described by the said last-mentioned act; and all such places locally situated in the county of Lancaster as will not be included in the Manchester District hereinbefore described; and all places locally situated in any of the several counties in Wales hereinafter next mentioned, that is to say,—the county of Anglesea, the county of Carnarvon, the county of Denbigh, the county of Flint, the county of Merioneth, and the county of Montgomery.

Birmingham District.

The Birmingham District shall comprehend all places locally situated in any of the several counties hereinafter next mentioned, that is to say,—the county of Warwick, the county of Worcester, the county of Hereford, the county of Salop, the county of Stafford, and the county of Leicester, and all places locally situated in the parts of Kesteven and Holland, in the county of Lincoln; and all places included within, or to be considered as forming parts of, the southern division of the county of Nottingham, as the same is settled and described by the said last-mentioned act; and the town and county of the town of Nottingham; and all places included within, or to be considered as forming parts of, the southern division of the county of Derby, as the same is settled and described by the same act.

Bristol District.

The Bristol District shall comprehend all places locally situated in the county of Gloucester; and all places locally situated in the county of Monmouth; and all places included within, or to be considered as forming parts of, the eastern division of the county of Somerset, as the same is settled and described by the same act; and the county of the city of Bristol, and all places within the limits of the city of Bristol, as the same are described in the said last-mentioned act; and all places locally situated in any of the several counties in Wales hereinafter next mentioned, that is to say,—the county of Brecon, the county of Cardigan, the county of Carmarthen, the county of Glamorgan, the county of Pembroke, and the county of Radnor.

Exeter District.

The Exeter district shall comprehend all places locally situated in the county of Devon; and all places locally situated in the county of Cornwall; and all places included within, or to be considered as forming parts of, the western division of the county of Somerset, as the same is settled and described by the said last-mentioned act; and all places locally situated in the county of Dorset, excepting the several places in the same county hereinafter next mentioned, that is to say,—Poole, Winborn Minster, Blandford, Sturminster, and Shaftesbury; and excepting also all other places locally situated in the said county of Dorset, which are situated within the distance of one hundred miles from the General Post Office, in the city of London; and the several places hereinbefore and hereinafter next mentioned, that is to say, Pool and Shaftesbury, shall include the place or places respectively which are comprehended within the boundaries of each such place, as such boundaries are settled and described by the said last-mentioned act.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne District.

And the Newcastle-upon-Tyne District shall comprehend all places locally situated in any of the several counties hereinafter mentioned, that is to say,—the county of Northumberland, the county of Durham, the county of Cumberland, the county of Westmoreland; and also the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed.

Provided always, and it is hereby further ordered and directed, that if any part of any county hereinbefore mentioned, which is detached from the main body of such county, but for which no sufficient provision is hereinbefore made, shall be surrounded by two or more counties, or divisions, or ridings, or parts, then every such detached part shall be considered as forming part of that county or division, riding or parts, with which such detached part shall have the longest common boundary.

And the Right Honourable the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain is to give the necessary directions herein accordingly.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—THIRD EDITION.

In 3 vols., royal 8vo., 4l. 14s. 6d. boards, A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW OF EVIDENCE and DIGEST of PROOFS in CIVIL and CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS. Third Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions. By THOS. STARKIE, Esq., of the Inner Temple, one of her Majesty's Counsel.

"There are now two general treatises on this extensive and intricate branch of Law, Mr. Starkie's and Mr. Phillipp's, of which it is not too much to say, that they excel all the text books of the day in the combination of learning and research with clear method and scientific precision. Mr. Phillipp's work, however, (that is to say, the last edition—which was published in 1838), labours under this disadvantage, that it is confined to an examination of the general principles of Evidence, and does not treat of the rules applicable to particular subjects and actions, otherwise than as they illustrate those general principles. Mr. Starkie on the other hand, reserving the first part of his work chiefly for the discussion of general principles, devotes two closely printed volumes to a Digest, alphabetically arranged, of the Rules of Evidence and the proof applicable to particular subjects and actions. It is in this that the great practical superiority and utility of Mr. Starkie's book consist."

IMPORTANT AND SALUTARY IMPROVEMENTS have been introduced into the practice of Life Assurance by this Company. All the advantages peculiar to mutual life assurance, arising from a division amongst the assured of the whole of the mutual profits, and that security and freedom from responsibility which proprietary companies can alone afford, are combined by the constitution of this, the only guaranteed Mutual Society.

By a half-premium credit system, one-half of the premiums may be retained for the first seven years, and repaid at the convenience of the assured; and by the ascending scale a greatly diminished rate of premium is required for the first twelve years, combining the advantages of an assurance for the whole duration of life with the economy of a temporary policy.

Specimen of Ascending Table.

Age.	First 3 Years.	Second 3 Years.	Third 3 Years.	Fourth 3 Years.	Remainder of Life.

By the Deed of Constitution, all policies issued by this Company are declared to be INDEFEASIBLE and INDISPUTABLE, unless obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation, which renders them peculiarly valuable as documents of security.

COMMISSION.—The solicitor who transacts our assurance with this Company, is held to be the agent of the policy during its currency, and receives the usual commission upon all the future premiums, by whomsoever they may be paid.

Prospectuses, schedules, and every information requisite to enable parties to effect assurances, will be forwarded, free of expense, by the agents or manager.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have been but very lately enabled to apply ourselves to the perusal of a considerable quantity of Correspondence addressed to us as Editors of THE JURIST, to which, till now, the pressure of other occupations had prevented our devoting the necessary portion of attention. The observations of some of our Correspondents, addressed to us on general subjects of legal inquiry, will we trust furnish us at some future period with materials for useful comment in THE JURIST; but many of the papers which are now before us, consist of inquiries which would properly be the subject of cases to be laid before counsel. We shall be always highly gratified, if any information contained in our pages in general essays on practical subjects, happens to apply to matters coming under the professional notice either of our subscribers or of casual readers; but we think it will be apparent to our Correspondents, when their attention is called to the point, that, firstly, it cannot be in our power to devote that portion of time to answering purely professional questions, which would enable us to give legal opinions of any value. And secondly, that if we could devote sufficient time to that object, we should yet be precluded by considerations of respect for the well-founded and wholesome usages of the profession, from advising in a manner which would undoubtedly be, and be considered, irregular and unprofessional. We therefore feel it our duty to state, in order to prevent Correspondents from placing us henceforth in the painful position of appearing uncourteous, that to all inquiries having the character of cases occurring in business, we are unable to reply in the columns of THE JURIST.

Our attention having been called to the Order in Council, defining the Country Districts in Bankruptcy, published in our Number of last week, we regret to find that an omission was made, in the hurry of publication, in that part of the Order relating to the "Bristol District." It should have been as follows:—

"The Bristol District shall comprehend all places locally situated in the county of Gloucester, and all places locally situated in the county of Monmouth, and all places included within or to be considered as forming parts of the Northern Division of the county of Wills, as the same is settled and described by the said last-mentioned Act, and all places included within or to be considered as forming parts of the Eastern Division of the county of Somerset, as the same is settled and described by the same Act. And &c." (as published last week).

In the Easter District Wimborn is printed for Wimborn.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 12, 1842.

OUR readers will recollect that when the recent Lunacy Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 84) was under discussion, and when it had passed into law, we offered some comments upon the introduction of a measure which appeared to us to be benevolently conceived, and wisely executed. The Act by itself merely, however, so far as it concerns the management of the property of persons found lunatic, created machinery for effecting reform, and armed the Chancellor with the necessary powers for setting that machinery in motion; and without Orders for regulating the functions and proceedings of the Commissioners, the Act would have done little beyond appointing standing Commissioners for taking inquiries, instead of fluctuating ones. Accordingly, the Lord Chancellor has issued certain Orders, bearing date the 27th ult., for carrying into effect in practice the improvements provided for by the Act, in relation to the management of lunatics and their estates after the inquiry.

It will be observed, that, by the 2nd and 3rd Orders, the inquiries and business concerning the estates of lunatics, hitherto conducted in the Master's Office, are transferred en masse, both as to present and future business, to the office of the Commissioners in Lunacy, except as to certain inquiries under the 1 Will. 4, c. 60, and except when the Lord Chancellor shall otherwise specially direct. Although, therefore, all the inquiries hitherto the subject of an order of reference to the Master will now go on in the Commissioners' Office, it seems clear that parties will be at liberty to apply to the Lord Chancellor for a special order of reference to the Master. But as the whole scheme of the Act and of the General Orders of the 27th October, is obviously to transfer all the business of ordinary inquiries from the Court and the Masters to the Commissioners, it is apprehended, that, to obtain a special order, it will be requisite to shew very special grounds to the Court why an inquiry should not be conducted in the Commissioners' Office; and it may be presumed also, that the party making such an application to the Court, will do so in general at the risk of costs, as it would be too much to suppose that the Court will lightly allow the costs of a special application to come out of the estate, when it has, by its General Order, declared the proper course to be, in general, to let the inquiry go on at once in the Commissioners' Office.

The most important of the New Orders, as regards the economy of lunacy proceedings, are the 9th, 10th, and four following ones, by which it will be perceived that all that source of expense which was formerly founded on the necessity of a distinct order of reference for every separate trifling inquiry, is at one blow swept away. The Act and the Orders alluded to constitute, in fact, now a general order of reference to the Commissioners from the date of the inquisition, (9th Order), touching all the matters which ordinarily call for inquiry, viz. who are the heirs or next of kin; the situation in life of the lunatic, and his fortune; who is a proper person to be the committee; by whom the lunatic has been maintained; what is a proper allowance for him; &c. The great improvement which is thus effected by a few very simple Orders, is too obviously manifest to require much comment. It was indeed most absurd, that it should be necessary to present a petition to a person of such high and multifarious functions as the Chancellor, and to waste two or three times a week a full hour of the time of the highest Court in the kingdom, with all the array and expense of counsel appearing, not only for the petitioner, but for every party interested, on some such difficult question, as whether a farm of the lunatic's, being out of lease, should be let, or whether a house, becoming injured by neglect, should be repaired; and that, not to have the opinion of the Court on the matter in question, and its order to do at once what was right, (for on the preliminary petition for an order of reference no such opinion was ever either asked or given), but merely to obtain the Chancellor's order to the Master to hear the parties, and inquire and report what was fit to be done. In other words, it being plain to every one that something was to be done, and it being plain that the Master, or some similar functionary, must inquire and inform the Chancellor what in particular was fit to be done, it was considered necessary in lunacy practice, in every separate case, to ask the Chancellor to permit the Master to be asked what was fit to be done; and this solemn mummery was to be at an expense to the unfortunate lunatic of sums varying from 10*l.* to 100*l.*, or perhaps more, according to the nature of the case and the number of parties required to appear. When such things are abolished, men begin to marvel that they should ever have been tolerated, and indeed it does seem singular that, in this age of simplification, it never should have occurred to any one before, that such a general order of reference as that contained in Lord Lyndhurst's New Orders, would answer the same purpose as making in each separate case a separate order, which was almost always as of course.

It is to be observed, however, that by the New Orders the Commissioners are not invested with any authority in general to "order;" they are only to "inquire and report;" and therefore it would seem that the practice, as to requiring an application to the Court for an order to confirm the report, will remain as it was before. Hence the double object will be obtained of preventing unnecessary expense to the lunatic by making a useless preliminary application to the Chancellor, and of preserving to him the protection of the Court, by allowing no material order to be made except under the authority and surveillance of the Court itself.

Another considerable economy both of time and money in the proceedings will be obtained by the 17th Order, providing that in drawing orders in lunacy, no part of the statements in the petition be recited, but only the prayer; and that no part of the Commissioner's report be stated in any order except the finding of opinion; and any mischievous consequence which might be apprehended from the grounds of the order not appearing, is provided against, by its being required that before the order shall be passed, the original petition shall be filed with the Secretary of Lunatics.

On the whole, the New Orders appear to us to be extremely simple and clear, and admirably adapted to carry out one of the objects of the Act, viz. the saving of time and expense in conducting the business of a lunatic's estate under the protection of Chancery, after he shall have been found a lunatic. That the emolument of both branches of the profession in conducting lunacy business will be much curtailed by these orders is most manifest; nevertheless we firmly believe that to no class of persons will the change be more acceptable than to the members of the legal profession, to whom we are well persuaded that no portion of their practice has been hitherto more mixed with feelings of pain and disgust, than that which consisted in transacting business, useless in fact, though necessary in point of form, at the price of loss, and perhaps even suffering and privation; to those whose helpless condition made them most stand in need of a careful and guarding hand.

We have much pleasure in inserting some observations forwarded to us on the subject of a paper which appeared in a former number of THE JURIST, (ante, p. 387), on the question—What is the effect of the 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 33, on the doctrine of lapse? Our correspondent, after stating the 33rd section, and alluding to the difference of opinion which has existed among the learned on the effect of it, proceeds thus:—

"In a previous number of your publication is contained a well-written argument on this subject, though I imagine not exactly correct in its tendency. The reasoning is as follows: that the naked expression at the close of the disputed section, that the devise shall take effect as if the death of such person had happened immediately after the death of the testator, confirms the decision of the candid inquirer to the former theory, (viz. that adopted by Mr. Jarman and Sir E. Sugden), unless he means in effect to contradict the statute, because, as he argues, 'if the child of a testator, being a devisee or legatee under his will, had survived the testator, it is incontestable that the will of such devisee or legatee would have passed the subject of the devise or legacy to him; and what the statute appears to do is, to create by its force an imaginary state of circumstances, and then to say that such effects shall take place, as if that imaginary state of circumstances were real. It says that the devise or legacy shall take effect, as if the devisee or legatee had survived the testator. Now, if it be held that the will of a devisee or legatee predeceasing the testator, under the circumstances referred to in the 33rd section, does not comprise in it and pass the subject of the gift, that is, in effect, to contradict the statute and to say that the gift shall not take effect, as if the donee had survived the testator; because, one of the effects of his actually so surviving would be, that his will would comprise and pass it.

"However plausible this reasoning may appear, yet these words do not convey to my mind the necessary conclusion that their intention was to confer upon the devisee of a living testator the power of disposing of the subject of such devise; but rather, that, the real intention of the section being to protect the issue, it has scrupulously avoided the danger (which was doubtless foreseen by its learned compiler) of such a construction; and that by the judicious insertion of the most important word immediately. Taking the same mode of argument as the learned contributor, I contend, that, as it cannot be denied, that, if a child of a testator who had also an interest in his parents' will had, before the passing of this act, departed this life immediately after the decease of such parent, the issue of the departed child would have had a perfect title to the property which was vested in the devisee before his death,—then, as the section distinctly affirms this to be its intention, what reason can there be for any ingenious or artificial arguments to thwart that intention, and to make the statute contradict itself? It has the effect as though the section had clearly asserted, that it should 'take effect as if the death of such person had happened immediately after the death of the testator, before any time could have elapsed in which a will could have been made and executed.' If this is not the construction, why was the word immediately inserted in the section at all? for, if it was placed there for any definite purpose, I cannot conceive of any other than the one here stated. But, truly, if the intention of the statute was to give a disposing power, that intention would have been much more apparent had the word immediately been entirely omitted.

"By the former construction, another principal and unavoidable objection occurs, viz. that the 33rd section cannot be thus understood without involving a direct contradiction of the 3rd section, which only empowers a testator to pass such interest by will as he may be entitled to at the time of his death. The onus probandi, therefore, that a devisee is entitled to his legacy before the death of the deviser, is imposed upon Mr. Jarman and Sir Edward Sugden, or they must admit, that a statute in one section may not only be permitted to revoke what it has said in a previous one, but actually to confirm an entirely opposite principle, which is preposterous. And I would ask here also, if the former construction is the intention of the Legislature, would not sect. 3 have contained an express proviso, allowing of the devise of property in a person whose right to that property has not accrued, provided he had issue living at the time of such devise? By the simple construction here suggested, the injurious effects of the former theory are avoided, the statute is preserved from self-contradiction, and the intention of the act (as acknowledged by the contributor) is better carried out. With these few remarks, I submit it to the readers of this excellent Journal, which is the true intention of the Legislature, and whether that intention has not been very clearly expressed."

The argument of our correspondent seems entirely to turn on the word "immediately" introduced in the 33rd section of the Wills Act, and is certainly the most subtle that can be well imagined. Perhaps, in its strictest sense, the word "immediately" may mean, without the interposition of any measurable portion of time; though it would be a strange presumption to suppose the Legislature to have intended to use it in that most unusual sense, when it would have been so easy to have expressed such meaning, if it existed, by words incapable of being misconstrued. But at any rate, the words "immediately after," cannot mean without the intervention of any actual portion of time, for if they did, the death of the child would be not "immediately after," but coeval with the death of the parent. It must therefore be intended, that the Act in the 33rd section contemplates the existence of some increment of time, however small, between the death of the parent and the death of the child; and if that be so, by what standard is the extent of that portion of time to be measured, and on what reasoning is it to be assumed that the Legislature meant some particular portion of time just long enough to make the death of the child subsequent, and just short enough to prevent the possibility of making a will? Indeed, what legal standard is there by which to measure the time requisite to make a will? Our correspondent, in order to sustain his very refined construction, is obviously driven to make the Legislature intend by the words "immediately after" a whole phrase, expressing quite a complex idea, viz. "so short a time after the death of the parent as to constitute an existing portion of time, provided such portion of time shall be not sufficient to make a will."

It occurs to us, that whatever may be the artificiality of our arguments in the observations alluded to, our correspondent surpasses us toto cœlo in that particular quality. And at any rate, whichever view is right in point of legal construction, it must be plain that a statute requiring such very refined modes of looking at it, to reconcile it with itself, cannot be pronounced to have clearly expressed its meaning. NEW BANKRUPT ACT.

SUPPLEMENT TO ARCHBOLD'S BANKRUPT LAW.

In the press and speedily will be published, A SUPPLEMENT to the Ninth Edition of ARCHBOLD'S LAW and PRACTICE of BANKRUPTCY, containing the New Statute digested and arranged according to the plan of the original work. With Notes, pointing out the Alterations effected in the Law, and Forms adapted to the New Practice; to which will be added a Copious Index. By JOHN FLATHER, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

S. Sweet, 1, Chancery-lane; and V. & R. Stevens & G. S. Norton, 26 and 39, Bell-yard. Of whom may be had,

ARCHBOLD'S BANKRUPT LAW.

12mo., price 1l. 1s. boards,

THE LAW and PRACTICE in BANKRUPTCY, as founded on the recent Statutes. By JOHN FREDERICK ARCHBOLD, Esq., Barrister at Law. The Ninth Edition, enlarged by the Statutes and Cases to 5 Vict., the General Orders of the Court of Bankruptcy, and New Forms and Tables of Costs. By JOHN FLATHER, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

CHITTY'S COLLECTION OF STATUTES of PRACTICAL UTILITY. Vol. 2, in Two Parts, price 3l. 3s. bds. A Collection of Statutes of Practical Utility, principally relating to the Civil Administration of Justice, with Notes thereon; intended as a Circuit and Court Companion, containing the Statutes from 10 Geo. 4, to 1 Vict., both inclusive. By J. CHITTY and J. W. HULME, Esqrs., Barristers.

Just published,

A GENERAL INDEX to MARTIN'S PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING. By CHARLES DAVIDSON, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law, and Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge. Price 7s. sewed.

DIGESTED INDEX OF THE STATUTES.—A DIGEST AND INDEX, with a Chronological Table, of all the Statutes from Magna Charta to the end of this last Session, 1840. By GEORGE CRABB, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law. In one thick vol., closely printed royal 8vo., price 2l. 2s. boards.

"The massive production which it is our welcome duty to introduce to our readers, is an honourable testimony to the energy of the author, and to the spirit of the publisher: a more acceptable present to the profession at large could scarcely be devised; but to magistrates and their legal advisers, it is calculated to prove most essentially serviceable.

"We most sincerely wish the publication may receive that encouragement from the public, to which, on the score of its great merit, it is justly entitled."—Justice of the Peace, Dec. 26, 1840.

A SECOND PART of the DIGEST AND INDEX of all the STATUTES, from Magna Charta to the end of the present Session 1842. By GEORGE CRABB, Esq., Barrister at Law. Royal 8vo. price boards.

The first part, which is more of an index than a digest, has prepared the way for a second part, in which a fourfold arrangement has been adopted; namely, the chronological order of the statutes, the numerical order of the sections, the systematic order of the subjects, and the alphabetical order of the titles. The first comes in aid of the systematic order at the head of each title, which is subdivided, when needful, into subordinate titles; the numerical order of the sections being observed in the abstracts of the most important statutes, serving, among other purposes, to show what portions of the statute have been repealed or amended. To which are added, with great care and exactness, the reported decisions of all the courts with which each section is connected. And, it is presumed by the publishers, that the whole presents to the professional reader a body of law unprecedented for its critical research and practical utility.

BILLS OF COSTS as ALLOWED on TAXATION; made out according to the late Regulations of all the Courts to Michaelmas Term, 1840. Fourth Edition, newly arranged and enlarged. 12mo., price 5s. 6d., extra boards.

STURGEON'S INSOLVENT ACTS.—The ACTS for RELIEF OF INSOLVENT DEBTORS, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, with Practical Notes; the Orders and Forms of the Insolvent Court, and the Rules and Forms in Bankruptcy for obtaining a Protecting Order. By CHARLES STURGEON, of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. 12mo., 6s. boards. 1842.

MACPHERSON ON THE LAW OF INFANTS.—A TREATISE on the LAW relating to INFANTS. By WILLIAM MACPHERSON, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law. Royal 8vo. 1l. 6s. boards.

Part II., completing the work, price 15s. boards. 1842.

THE NEW PRACTICE of the COURTS of LAW at WESTMINSTER, with Forms embodied in the Text, for the Use of Town and Country Practitioners. By WILLIAM BAGLEY, of the Inner Temple, Esq., Barrister at Law. Royal 8vo., 1l. 14s. boards. 1840.

CHANCERY REPORTS.

This day is published, Vol. 1, Part 3, with Index &c., completing the Vol. price 14s.,

REPORTS of CASES argued and determined in the HIGH COURT of CHANCERY in IRELAND, during the time of Lord Chancellor SUGDEN; commencing with Michaelmas Term, 1841. By HENRY CONNOR and JAMES A. LAWSON, Esqrs., Barristers at Law.

"This number of those valuable and accurate Reports completes the first volume, and we feel fully justified in recommending them to our readers. In our former volume we were induced to hazard an opinion that these Reports would be the Reports of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, in which opinion we have been, to a great extent, borne out by the approbation which has been bestowed upon it by the profession, both in this country and in England; their success is now past all doubt, and we have to congratulate ourselves in bringing these Reports under the notice of the profession, both here and in England. The number contains upwards of 250 pages, besides a very copious index, table of cases cited and reported, and a title-page. It is altogether, both as to matter, and the manner in which the work has been sent to the public, highly creditable to Ireland."—Legal Reporter, Nov. 5.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 19, 1842.

IN our last we took occasion to speak of the late New Orders in Lunacy in terms of almost unqualified approbation. We now approach the more voluminous Orders issued for the regulation of the Practice in Chancery Proceedings; and of these, we regret to say, the aspect is of a much more mixed character. Some of them are obviously beneficial, as, for instance, those relating to the duties of the Clerk of the Inrolments, the Clerks of Records and Writs, and the Clerk of Affidavits, which enable those officers at once to administer oaths for the purpose of acknowledgments, pleas, answers, affidavits, &c. (See Orders 1, 7, and 29). These Orders promise an increase of convenience and despatch in the transaction of business in pressing cases, particularly in injunction cases, where, under the old practice, considerable difficulty existed frequently in getting affidavits sworn and filed, and the office copies, although made by the solicitor himself, marked by the Clerk of the Affidavits, with sufficient despatch to be available when the motion in which they were to be used came on.

Those of the New Orders (9 to 15 inclusive) which relate to the duties of the Taxing Masters, do not appear to us to call for any particular observation. They very clearly and fully direct the mode in which the transfer is to be made from the Masters to the new officers, of that portion of the Masters' duties which consisted in taxing costs; and they appear to arm the Taxing Masters with sufficient powers for the convenient execution of their duties.

The next parcel of the New Orders consists of those which transfer to the solicitor those duties of the Clerks in Court, which they executed, not as officers of the Court, but as attorneys, solicitors, or agents of the parties. (Orders 16 to 28 inclusive). These Orders also appear to us to be clear and precise in their terms, a point of itself of no slight merit in Chancery Orders.

Of their effect in detail on the solicitor and the suitor it is difficult yet to pronounce an opinion; but of their general effect on the practitioner it is not too much to say, that, coupled with the 4th Order, which leaves it to the person wanting a writ to prepare it himself, they impose a very considerable additional labour and difficulty on the solicitor, in the conduct of a suit. In practice, the preparation of writs was wholly left to the Clerk in Court, and the solicitor was not called upon to occupy himself in acquiring a knowledge of the frame of the different writs. Hence that knowledge is not possessed by the profession, speaking generally, yet now it is thrown upon them to prepare all writs, without any official materials to guide them. It is true, no doubt, that the forms of the writs are common forms, that they exist somewhere, and are preserved in some hands; and it may be equally true, that the Clerks in Court were not, strictly speaking, official depositaries of the forms. But they were quasi official depositaries, and were in practice treated as such; and the loss of their services in the preparation of writs, without any adequate substitute for it, will consequently be felt as a considerable inconvenience, at any rate for some time, to the profession. We trust our readers will not consider these our remarks as in the nature of a lamentation for the demise of the Clerks in Court. What we lament is, not that they should have been condemned to die, but that some instructions, deriving weight from authority, should not have been given to aid their successors. A schedule of forms of writs would have been, in our humble opinion, a very great addition to the merit of the New Orders; and the absence of that, or of some other authorized guide, is, we believe, felt by the profession as a material grievance.

There is another matter of detail in this part of the New Orders, which seems opposed to the arrangements that have been becoming yearly more prevalent in recent times among the profession, with regard to the hours during which offices are kept open. Under the old practice, the Six Clerks' Office was not open after four in the afternoon; and as service of writs &c. was made there, it followed, that though solicitors might, if they chose, keep their offices open till late in the evening, they were not, in reference to their Chancery official business, under any pressing necessity to do so; and accordingly it has been notoriously a growing practice for solicitors as well as counsel to close their places of business at some rational hour in the afternoon. But now by the 22nd New Order, service will be good service till eight in the evening; and as the service is no longer made at the Six Clerks' Office, but on the solicitor, it follows that no solicitor who is conducting any Chancery business, can venture to close his office till after eight, lest he should materially damnify his client by not being aware of the service of some important instrument till the next morning, when it may be too late to meet it. There seems no rational ground for thus indirectly reviving the evening imprisonment of the profession in the pleasant vicinages of Chancery Lane and Gray's Inn, and other similar legal localities.

We come now to that portion of the New Orders on which, as might be expected, the greatest amount of discussion has arisen, viz. the Schedules of Fees; and here we must observe, that although we cannot but agree that there is much to be said against them, yet of all the slanders that have ever been heaped upon Chancery Orders, none was ever more unfounded than that which has stigmatised these as a bungling and ill-digested performance. Keeping in view what must have been the object in settling the new scales of fees, we unhesitatingly pronounce the Schedules of Fees of the New Orders to be most masterly productions.

Let us recollect what was the change effected by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103: The offices of the Six Clerks, and of the Sworn Clerks or Clerks in Court, are thereby abolished, but their duties remain to be performed; for certain of those duties, new officers are created, of course with salaries; and as to certain other of their duties, the Act makes no provision for the execution of them: they must therefore be performed by somebody, and that remained to be provided for by the Orders. The Act also provided compensation for the officers whose emoluments it abolished; and all the salaries, compensations, and allowances under the Act, are directed to be paid (as is usual whenever an Act of Parliament abolishes any office on the ground of its being a grievance to the suitor) out of the "Suits' Fee Fund Account."

The effect of all this is, that there is a burthen to be borne, partly in money and partly in labour. Now, there were, before the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103, four parties between whom it might have been divided—the public, the official persons doomed to annihilation, the suitors, and their agents the solicitors. The Legislature has taken care, by the Act in question, that the public shall bear no part, and the official persons a very small part, of the burthen. (See sects. 12 and 13). What then remained for the Orders but to distribute it between the suitors and the solicitors, and to do so in such a manner, that, though between them they do bear it, it shall be difficult for either to put his finger on the particular part of which he separately can complain, as an unadulterated grievance? This we say was the thing necessary to be done by the New Orders, so far as they touch the expenses of proceedings; and this we say they have done in a very masterly manner.

Most of the fees are higher in the whole than they were, but they are not all so; and of those that are, all are not so in the same proportion; so that it seems difficult at first sight to imagine on what principle the scale has been arranged. Let us for instance take some of the fees marked in Schedule 2 in combination with those of Schedule 6. The fees of Schedule 2 are to be paid to the Clerks of Records and Writs, (32nd Order), and the amount received is to be paid to the Suits' Fee Fund. (33rd Order). The fees comprised in the 6th Schedule, are those which are to be received by the solicitor for certain duties, and are, as regards the suitor, in addition to certain of the fees payable under the 2nd Schedule. Now, on looking at the following table, which exhibits a few items taken by way of example from the 2nd and 6th Schedules, with the corresponding fees of the old practice, it will be seen that, as we have stated, the suitor is to pay a considerably higher total than he did formerly.

NEW PRACTICE.

	Clerk of Records.	Solicitor.	Total.

But by the same table, and by a more close examination of the entire Schedules, it will be seen, as we have also stated, that the increase of the fees, where they are increased, seems governed by no fixed law; and that, in some cases, they are not increased to any extent deserving notice. Still, however, in respect to the great majority of the items, either the suitor has more to pay, or the solicitor has more labour for a proportionably small remuneration. It is true, that, as regards the solicitor, his visible increase of labour is apparently provided for by the 6th Schedule; but it is only apparently provided for. For if we recollect, that, by the abolition of the Six Clerks' Office, a much greater amount of trouble will be thrown on the solicitor in respect to service of writs, notices, &c., (which, instead of being, as formerly, served at one place, viz. the Six Clerks' Office, will now require to be served at as many different places as there are different suits); while the fees for those duties of the solicitor remain the same as they were before; and if we remember, also, that, by the abolition of the Clerks in Court, who transacted their business with a certain extent of credit to the solicitor, the solicitor will be under the necessity of making greater advances in a suit than heretofore, it must, we think, be plain, that the solicitor as well as the suitor will be a substantial loser by the operation of the New Orders.

In fact, through all the apparent irregularities in the change of the scale of fees, we trace the one pervading principle of dividing, as fairly and as unobtrusively as possible, the loss which the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103 has sent forth to be borne by somebody other than the public and the demoralised officers, between the suitor and the solicitor; as regards the former, by increase, generally speaking, of fees; as regards the latter, by increase of unrequited or insufficiently requited labour. And so intimately has this principle penetrated even into apparently trivial details, that it will be found at work in what appears at first sight to be, and doubtless has been partly intended to be, an attempt at simplification in the computation of bills of costs, by introducing, instead of the old inconvenient subdivisions of the mark and noble, the modern and more convenient ones of the pound sterling or guinea. Thus in Schedule 2, in all the cases where the old fee was 3*s.* 4*d.*, 6*s.* 8*d.*, or 13*s.* 4*d.*, and where it is not materially altered in amount, we find it transformed into 4*s.*, 7*s.*, and 14*s.* No doubt it is much more easy to compute in sums of 4*s.*, 7*s.*, or 14*s.*, than in sums of 3*s.* 4*d.*, 6*s.* 8*d.*, and 13*s.* 4*d.*; but if that be so, with regard to Schedule 2, there seems no reason why a like arithmetical improvement should not have been introduced into Schedule 6; and the omission would indeed be inexplicable, if we did not call to mind that the fees paid under Schedule 2 pass into the inalienable fee fund, while those of Schedule 6 are the reward of the labour transferred by the Act and the New Orders to the solicitor.

In conclusion, we would observe on these already famous Orders, that much misconception has arisen by supposing them of necessity intended to effect reform in equity proceedings, and by coupling, as of necessity synonymous, the ideas of reform and diminution of expense. The New Orders, it should be recollected, are not original and unfettered creations of the Judges of the Court, but are the offspring of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103, dictated and fettered by its provisions, and expressly necessitate intended to carry them out. If they effect reform of any kind, they do so, not of their own conception, but only in so far as the Statute has directed and limited that reform. If they strike hard, as they undoubtedly do, on the suitor and the solicitor, they do so merely as instruments under the Statute.

In fine, they must be looked at simply as the directions how to do that which the Statute has directed to be done. Undoubtedly, they might have carried the provisions of the Statute into effect in a different mode: they might have thrown on the suitor alone, or on the solicitor alone, the bulk of that burthen which the Statute has left to be borne by those two classes of individuals; or they might have made it clearer than they have done, which of the two classes really bears the greater share of the burthen. But if they had pursued either of these courses, we apprehend, that great as the clamour is that has been already raised against the New Orders, it is but as the voice of an infant compared to the loud and universal outcry that would have burst from that class, which should have felt itself clearly and definitely marked out as the sole victim.

We would call the attention of our readers interested in questions of franchise, to the 72nd clause of Sir James Graham's Registration Bill, which purports to put an end to the difficulties that have arisen on the construction of the 23rd and 26th clauses of the Reform Act. It will be recollected, that the 23rd clause of that Act appears to have intended trustees to vote, if in actual possession or receipt of the rents and profits; while the 26th appears to negative the inference arising from the 23rd, by making it necessary that the claimant should have been in possession for his own use.

The 72nd clause of the present bill, referring to the 23rd section of the Reform Act, enacts as to trustees, that "no trustee shall in any case have a right to vote in any such election for or by reason of any trust estate, but that the cestui que trust, if in possession, or in the receipt of the rents and profits to his own use, though he may receive the same through the hands of the trustee, shall and may vote for the same, notwithstanding such trust."

We submit that this clause, although it settles some doubts, will open others. It clearly enough declares that no trustee shall ever vote as such; but it does not so clearly declare in what cases, if ever, the right of voting of the cestui que trust shall cease. It gives the right of voting to the cestui que trust if he is in possession to his own use; or if, not being in actual possession, he is in receipt of the rents and profits to his own use, although he may receive the same through the hands of the trustee. Now, technically speaking, we apprehend there cannot be such a thing as a cestui que trust who does not ultimately receive the rents and profits to his own use, either by himself or by the hands of his trustee, inasmuch as it is this very right to the ultimate receipt of rents, which, constituting the beneficial ownership, is the principal ingredient of his character of cestui que trust. The clause would, therefore, prima facie, be supposed to intend, by a very circuitous mode of expression, to give the right of voting in all cases to the cestui que trust, whether technically in or out of the receipt of the rents. But then, inasmuch as it does not in terms give the right to the cestui que trust in all cases, but only when he is in possession, or in the receipt of the rents by himself or by his trustee, it must be supposed to contemplate the possibility of there being a cestui que trust not entitled, that is, a cestui que trust who is not ultimately in the receipt of the rents either by himself or by the hands of his trustee. And the question will then be, what state of circumstances will constitute such a cestui que trust, and whether the Act intends to treat, not the cestui que trust of the deed, but the person actually ultimately receiving the rents, as the cestui que trust.

A case may be imagined in which a cestui que trust may be said to be in receipt of the rents and profits, for his own use, technically speaking, but not for his own use substantially; as in the case of his having created a charge on his estate. In this case he would be in receipt of the rents and profits to his own use, in a sense but not for his own beneficial use. And the question will arise again, as it has done under the Reform Act, in what sense does the Legislature employ the expression, "for his own use"? Whether in the mere legal sense, or in the sense of beneficial enjoyment; whether it attaches the vote to the mere dominion of the rents, or to the actual beneficial enjoyment of them. Suppose it to be held that the cestui que trust under such cases is not in the receipt of the rents to his own use; then does the Legislature, under the clause in question, mean that he is not properly cestui que trust within the Act, and that the equitable incumbrancer actually receiving the rents for his own beneficial use, is, for the purpose of voting, the cestui que trust, or does it mean that there is no cestui que trust within the meaning of the Act, and that there shall be no vote?

These doubts are not at all more technical and abstruse than those suggested under the conflicting clauses of the Reform Act, and we trust to see the 72nd clause of this Bill ultimately so worded as to leave no ground for them.

Regulæ Generales.

THE NEW RULES AND ORDERS IN BANKRUPTCY.

ORDER made by the Right Hon. JOHN SINGLETON Lord
LYNDHURST, LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR OF GREAT BRITAIN, in pursuance of the Statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122.—
12th November, 1842.

I DO HEREBY ORDER AND DIRECT as follows, that is to say :

I. That every fiat in bankruptcy hereafter granted shall be forthwith issued and transmitted by the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts to the Court to which such fiat shall be directed, in manner hereinafter in that behalf mentioned; that is to say, every such fiat directed to the Court of Bankruptcy shall forthwith be sent, by a messenger to be appointed by the said secretary for that purpose, to the office of the chief registrar of such court at the said court in Basinghall-street, and there delivered by such messenger; and every such fiat directed to any district court of bankruptcy shall forthwith be sent (except where the Lord Chancellor shall by any special order hereafter otherwise direct) through the General Post-office to the deputy-registrar or the deputy registrars of such district court.

II. That every commissioner of bankrupt and every fiat in bankruptcy heretofore issued and directed to any commissioners in the country, and opened, or purporting by the proceedings to have been opened, at any place situated within any one of the several districts in the country mentioned in and settled and described by an order bearing date the 2nd November, 1842, and made by Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, in pursuance of an act of Parliament passed in the Parliament holden in the 5 & 6 Vict. intituled, "An Act for the Amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy," or directed to any commissioners in the country heretofore authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy at or for any such place and within twenty miles thereof, but not opened, shall be and the same is hereby transferred and removed into the district court of bankruptcy authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country within the district in which such place shall be situate; and every commission of bankrupt and every fiat in bankruptcy heretofore issued and directed to any commissioners in the country, and opened, or purporting by the proceedings to have been opened, in the country elsewhere than at any place situated within any one of the said several districts so settled and described as aforesaid, or directed to any commissioners in the country heretofore authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy elsewhere than at or for any such place, but not opened, shall be and the same is hereby transferred and removed into the Court of Bankruptcy in London; and all further proceedings in every commission and fiat so transferred and removed as aforesaid shall be thenceforth prosecuted and carried on in manner directed by the said act in the court to which the same is hereby ordered to be transferred and removed.

III. That forthwith, after the registering in any District Court of Bankruptcy of any commission or fiat in bankruptcy opened since the passing of the act 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 56, and at every public sitting of the court thereafter under such commission or fiat, and forthwith after the advertisement of the adjudication, and every public sitting thereafter, under every fiat hereafter opened in any District Court of Bankruptcy, minutes of such commission and fiat and of the proceedings shall be transmitted by the court acting in the prosecution of such commission or fiat to the Court of Bankruptcy in London, to be there kept and filed among the records of the said court, in manner following; that is to say, a minute of the commission or fiat and proceedings shall be made from time to time in the form hereinafter set forth, so far as the same may be applicable, by the deputy registrar, and certified by him as correct, and the deputy registrar shall cause such minute to be sent by the post to the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy in Basinghall-street, who shall file the same among the records of such court:—

IV. That every sum directed to be paid under section 57 of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, or under section 47 of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 56, shall be taken by the deputy-registrar of the court authorized to act in the prosecution of the commission or fiat under which such sum shall be payable; and an account of all sums so taken shall be kept by such deputy-registrar, and such sums shall be certified by the commissioner to correspond with the number of sittings, and be paid by the deputy-registrar monthly into the Bank of England, or in the country into one of the branches thereof, or such other bank as shall be named by the Bank of England for that purpose, to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, to be carried to the account intituled "The Secretary of Bankrupts' Account," and the voucher for such payment shall be produced to the commissioner within one week thereafter.

V. That the sum directed by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 78, to be charged to and paid out of the estate of the bankrupt under every fiat prosecuted in the country, for every sitting under such fiat, shall be received by the deputy-registrar of the court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat; and a separate account of all sums so received shall be kept by the deputy-registrar: and such sums shall be certified by the commissioner to correspond with the number of sittings, and be paid by the deputy-registrar, monthly, into one of the branches of the Bank of England, or such other bank as shall be named by the Bank of England for that purpose, to the account intituled "Interest arising from the Bankruptcy Fund Account."

VI. That printed copies of this order shall be supplied by the Lord Chancellor's secretary of Bankrupts to the several courts authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in Bankruptcy in London, and in the several districts in the country, and to the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy in Basinghall-street, and one copy shall be posted up in some conspicuous place in every such court, and in the office of the chief registrar.

LYNDHURST, C.

GENERAL RULES and ORDERS made under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 70, for regulating the Forms of Proceedings (where not provided for by the said Act) and the Practice to be observed in every Court authorized to act in the PROSECUTION of FIATS in BANKRUPTCY. 12th November 1842.

It is ORDERED as follows; that is to say,

I. After the expiration of one calendar month from the date of these Rules and Orders, no attorney or solicitor shall be allowed to practise in any District Court of Bankruptcy until he shall have been admitted and inrolled as an attorney or solicitor of the Court of Bankruptcy in manner prescribed by the general Rules and Orders made for regulating the practice of the said court, and bearing date the 12th January 1832.

II. Every commission or fiat in bankruptcy transferred to the Court of Bankruptcy in London under the provisions of the act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 62, shall, before or forthwith after any proceeding thereupon in such court, be registered in the office of the chief registrar in Basinghall-street in a book to be kept for that purpose, and allotted by ballot to one of the commissioners of such court, in the same manner as fiats directed to such court are now allotted, or in such other manner as the commissioners shall from time to time direct.

III. Every fiat issued after the commencement of the aforesaid act, and directed to the Court of Bankruptcy in London, shall, forthwith after the delivery of the same at such court, be filed of record in the office of the chief registrar in Basinghall-street, and a minute of the date of so filing the same shall be made at the time, in writing, at the foot of such fiat; and such fiat shall not be opened, upon the application of any other creditor than the petitioning creditor, until after the expiration of three days from such date.—(See sect. 4).

IV. Every commission or fiat in bankruptcy transferred to any District Court of Bankruptcy under the provisions of the act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 52, shall, before, or forthwith after, any proceeding thereupon in such court, be registered by a deputy registrar attending such court, in a book to be kept for that purpose, and in districts where there are two commissioners shall be allotted, by ballot, in the presence of the solicitor acting under such commission or fiat, or in rotation in such manner as the commissioners shall from time to time direct, to one of such commissioners, and shall be further prosecuted before such commissioner, or before the district commissioner, where there is only one commissioner: Provided always, that either of the commissioners authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in any district in the country may, in the absence of the other commissioner, sit or act for him.

V. Every fiat issued after the commencement of the aforesaid act, and directed to any district court of bankruptcy, shall, forthwith after the delivery of the same at such court, be registered by a deputy-registrar attending such court in a book to be kept for that purpose, and a minute of the date of so registering the same shall be made at the time, in writing, at the foot of such fiat; and such fiat shall not be opened, upon the application of any other creditor than the petitioning creditor, until after the expiration of three days from such date; and such fiat shall be allotted by ballot, or in rotation, and prosecuted as directed with respect to a commission or fiat transferred to such court, subject to the like proviso in case of the absence of a commissioner.

VI. The present practice in the Court of Bankruptcy, where not inconsistent with or otherwise directed by the aforesaid act or these rules and orders, shall, until further order, be followed in such court, and in every district court of bankruptcy; and every proceeding in any district court of bankruptcy, where not by the aforesaid act or herein specially provided for, shall, until further order, be in the same form (mutatis mutandis), and the paper thereof of the same size, as is now used in the Court of Bankruptcy in London, and shall be kept in such district court, unless and until directed by the Lord Chancellor to be transmitted to the Court of Bankruptcy in London.—(See sect. 47).

VII. Every attorney or solicitor of the Court of Bankruptcy having in his custody or power the proceedings under any fiat in bankruptcy, opened, or purporting by the proceedings to have been opened, at any time after the passing of the act 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 56, shall forthwith bring such fiat and proceedings into the Court of Bankruptcy or district court of bankruptcy into which such fiat shall have been transferred and removed (as the case may be), to be registered in such court, and further prosecuted therein, as hereinbefore in that behalf directed.

VIII. The deputy registrar attending the commissioner shall take minutes and have the charge of all proceedings before him, and otherwise assist in the business of the court, subject in all cases to the control of the commissioner.

IX. Every application by a petitioning creditor to extend the time for opening any fiat shall be supported by affidavit to be filed in court.—(See sect. 4).

X. In every case where the time for opening any fiat shall be extended under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 4, the commissioner shall forthwith cause notice to be sent by the post to the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts of the extended time allowed by the court.

XI. In every advertisement of an adjudication of bankruptcy in the London Gazette, the date of the fiat under which such adjudication shall have been made shall be stated.—(See sect. 24).

XII. The personal attendance of the petitioning creditor, and of the witness or witnesses to prove the trading and act of bankruptcy, upon the opening of the fiat, shall in no case be dispensed with, except upon special cause proved to the satisfaction of the commissioner.—(See sect. 68).

XIII. If any person adjudged bankrupt intend to dispute such adjudication, such person shall cause notice of his intention so to do to be served upon the petitioning creditor or his solicitor, and the deputy registrar of the court, two days at the least before the day of shewing cause against such adjudication.

XIV. The bankrupt's balance sheet must be filed in duplicate with the deputy registrar of the court ten days at least before the day appointed for the last examination of the bankrupt, or the adjournment-day thereof for that purpose (one copy for the official assignee, and the other for the proceedings); and the last examination of the bankrupt shall in no case be passed by the court unless his balance sheet shall have been duly filed as aforesaid: office copies of the balance sheet, or such part thereof as shall be required, shall be provided by the proper officer.

XV. Every bill of fees and disbursements, and charges of any solicitor or attorney, or messenger, under any commission or fiat in bankruptcy, incurred prior to any sitting for an audit under such commission or fiat, shall be delivered to the deputy registrar for taxation five days, at least, before the day appointed for such sitting; and, in default thereof, if such sitting shall be adjourned by reason of such default, such solicitor or attorney, or messenger, shall pay the costs occasioned by the adjournment, and the amount thereof shall be deducted from the amount of such bill; and no money shall be paid to any solicitor or attorney, or messenger, on account of any fees or disbursements or charges of any bill, until such bill shall have been taxed.

XVI. The audit account of the official assignee, or of any creditors' assignee or assignees, shall be made out in the ordinary form of a debtor and creditor account, each item thereof being entered according to its date, and a name, date, and proper explanation given to such item; and a duplicate of such account shall be sent by the official assignee to the solicitor two days at least prior to the day appointed for the auditing of such account, subject to the power of the commissioner, to require an account, digested under proper heads, to be annexed to the audit account, if he shall think proper.

XVII. At every audit the debtor and property book exhibited to the court by the official assignee shall be carefully examined and compared with the debts and property collected as stated in the audit paper, and the cause of any monies remaining uncollected shall be ascertained, and a minute thereof made, and filed with the proceedings; and all persons appearing to be indebted to the bankrupt's estate shall be forthwith summoned and examined in that behalf upon oath, and the examination so taken shall be filed with the proceedings; and such directions shall be given by the court as to any further proceedings thereupon as to the court shall seem fit.

XVIII. No audit and dividend shall be appointed for the same day, except for some special cause, to be stated to the court in writing, at the time of such appointment, and allowed.

XIX. Under every fiat issued within six months before the commencement of the aforesaid act, or hereafter to be issued, a final dividend shall be advertised within two years after the date of such fiat; and under every commission or fiat issued twelve months or more prior to the commencement of the aforesaid act a final dividend shall be advertised within eighteen months after the commencement of the aforesaid act, unless, in either of the cases aforesaid, there be some cause to the contrary to the satisfaction of the commissioner, to be stated in writing, and filed with the proceedings.—(See sect. 55). Mem.—To facilitate compliance with this rule, register estate book of official assignee should be periodically examined.

XX. The particulars of demand and notice under the aforesaid act, and specified in schedule A (No. 2), shall, in cases where the debt demanded is claimed to be due to a partnership firm, be signed by or in the name of one of the partners, on behalf of himself and partner or partners, adding after such signature the style or firm of partnership and place of business as follows:—(that is to say,) "John Thompson, for self and partners, trading under the style or firm of — at — in the county of —;" and in cases where the debt demanded is claimed to be due to any one person, or to two or more persons not being partners in trade, such particulars of demand and notice shall be signed by or in the name of every such person by his christian and surname, and his or their residence or place of business as follows:—(that is to say,) "Edward Jones, residing at — in the county of —, or carrying on business at — in the county of —." N. B.—The particulars of demand and notice must be a copy of the particulars of demand and notice required to be annexed to the affidavit of debt.

XXI. Such particulars and notice shall be directed to the party or parties intended to be summoned by the christian and surname of each of them, (or, when the christian name is not known, then by the initial letter or letters, or some contraction of the christian name, and by the surname), and also by the place of residence, in the same form as mentioned in the last rule, and shall also contain in the body thereof a statement of the name or names of all the persons from whom the debt is claimed to be due, whether the whole of them shall be summoned or not or (in the case of partners) the style or firm of partnership, and place of business, in the same form as mentioned in the same rule.—(See sect. 11).

XXII. The account in such particulars of demand shall be expressed with reasonable and convenient certainty, as to dates and all other matters; and where credit is given in such account to the debtor, the notice shall require payment of the difference, or balance only, which appears to be due on such account.

XXIII. If the affidavit for summoning a debtor under the said act shall not be filed within one calendar month after service of the particulars of demand and notice, the plaintiff (or creditor) shall not afterwards be at liberty to proceed without serving new particulars of demand and notice.

XXIV. Every affidavit under the said act shall be entitled of "The Court of Bankruptcy in London," or "The Court of Bankruptcy for the — District" (as the case may be).

XXV. Every affidavit for summoning a debtor under the said act shall state the nature of the debt with the same degree of certainty and precision as is now required in an affidavit to hold to bail by order of a judge in the superior courts at Westminster.

XXVI. Every summons of a debtor under the said act shall describe the parties in the same manner as they were described in the particulars of demand and notice.

XXVII. Every such summons shall be indorsed with a notice as follows:—(See sects. 11 to 19 inclusive).

"Notice to the Party Summoned."

"This summons is served upon you pursuant to the provisions of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, intitled 'An Act for the Amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy,' and is founded on an affidavit of debt which was filed in the Court of Bankruptcy in London (or the Court of Bankruptcy for the — District) at —, on the — day of —, 184—.

"If you shall fail to appear in person to this summons at the time and place within specified (having no lawful impediment made known to and proved to the satisfaction of the said court at the said time, and allowed), and if you also fail within fourteen days after service of this summons, or within such enlarged time as the said court may grant, to pay, secure, or compound for the demand within mentioned to the satisfaction of the summoning creditor, or enter into a bond, with two sureties, to be approved of by the said court, to pay such sum as shall be recovered in any action which shall have been brought or shall thereafter be brought for recovery of the same, together with such costs as shall be given in such action, you will be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the fifteenth day after the service of this summons, provided a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against you within two calendar months from the filing of the above-mentioned affidavit.

"If you shall appear, and on appearance shall refuse to sign an admission of the said demand in the form required by the said act, and shall not make a deposition on your oath, in the form required by the said act, that you believe you have a good defence to such demand, and shall also fail within fourteen days after service of this summons, or within such enlarged time as aforesaid, to pay, secure, or compound as above mentioned, or to enter into such bond as above mentioned, the same consequence will follow as in the case first supposed, subject to the same proviso as regards the issuing a fiat in bankruptcy.

"If you shall appear, and on appearance shall sign an admission of the said demand, and shall not within fourteen days next after the filing of such admission pay, or tender and offer to pay, to the said creditor the amount of such demand, or secure or compound for the same to the satisfaction of such creditor, you will be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the fifteenth day after the filing of such admission, subject to the same proviso as before mentioned with regard to the issuing a fiat in bankruptcy.

"If you shall appear, and on appearance shall sign an admission for part of the said demand, and shall not make a deposition, on your oath, in form required by the said act, that you believe you have a good defence to the residue, then, if, as to the sum so admitted, you shall not, within fourteen days next after the filing of such admission, pay, or tender and offer to pay, to the said creditors, the sum so admitted, or secure or compound for the same to the satisfaction of such creditor, and as to the residue of such demand shall not within fourteen days from the service of this summons, or such enlarged time as may be granted by the said court in that behalf, pay, secure, or compound for the same to the satisfaction of such creditor, or enter into a bond, with two sureties, to be approved of by the court, to pay such sum as shall be recovered in any action which shall have been brought or shall thereafter be brought for recovery of the same, together with such costs as shall be given in such action, you will be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the fifteenth day after the service of this summons, subject to the same proviso as before mentioned with regard to the issuing the fiat in bankruptcy.

"If you shall appear, and on appearance shall, as to the whole of the said demand, or part of it, make a deposition on your oath, in the form required by the said act, that you believe you have a good defence to the same, you will be entitled to a discharge from the summons.

"You are moreover to observe that an admission made by you after the service of this summons, though signed out of court, may afterwards be filed in court, and will be as effectual as if you had appeared and signed it in court, provided there be present at the time of the signature an attorney of one of her Majesty's superior courts of law, on your behalf, expressly named by you, and attending at your request, to inform you of the effect of such admission, before it is signed by you; and provided also, that such attorney do subscribe his name to the admission as a witness, and in such attestation declare himself to be attending for you, and state therein that he subscribes as such attorney; and provided also, that the admission be in the following form:—

"I, the undersigned E. F., of —, in the county of —, do hereby confess that I am indebted to A. B., of —, in the sum of —.

"Signed, E. F.

"Dated this — day of —, 184—.

"Witness G. H., attorney for said E. F., and subscribing witness to the execution hereof as such attorney."

XXVIII. Every summons of a debtor under the said act shall be indorsed with the name and place of residence (according to the form of specifying name and place directed by Rule XX.) of the attorney actually suing out the same; and in case such attorney shall not be an attorney of the Court of Bankruptcy, then also with the name and place of residence (according to the same form) of the attorney of such court in whose name the summons shall be sued out; but in case no attorney shall be employed for the purpose, then with a memorandum expressing that the same has been sued out by the summoning creditor "in person."

XXIX. Every such summons shall be served four days at least before the time for appearance therein mentioned.

XXX. Every such summons shall be served between the hours of nine o'clock in the forenoon and nine o'clock in the evening.

XXXI. If the plaintiff (creditor) shall make default in appearance at the time appointed in that behalf, the defendant (debtor) shall be entitled to his discharge from the summons; and a memorandum of such discharge shall be indorsed on the summons.

XXXII. If the defendant shall appear at the time appointed in that behalf, and shall refuse to admit such demand, but shall, as to the whole of the said demand, or part of it, make a deposition on oath, in the form required by the said act, that he believes he has a good defence to the same, the defendant shall be entitled to his discharge from the summons, and a memorandum of such discharge shall be indorsed on the summons.

XXXIII. Any want of compliance on the part of the plaintiff with these rules and orders in the particulars of demand and notice, and in the affidavit for summoning the defendant, and in the summons and service thereof, or in any or either of such matters, may be waived by the defendant, or if made known to and proved to the satisfaction of the court, at the time required by the summons for the appearance of the defendant, shall be deemed and taken to be a good objection to requiring the defendant to state whether or not he admits the demand sworn to by the plaintiff, or any part thereof; and in such case, if such want of compliance be not waived, the defendant shall be entitled to his discharge from the summons, and a memorandum of such discharge shall be indorsed on the summons.

XXXIV. Every application to enlarge the time for calling on the defendant to state whether or not he admits the demand or any part thereof, or for entering into a bond, with sureties, shall be supported by affidavit.

XXXV. Before any defendant shall be allowed to enter into a bond, with sureties, according to the provisions of the said act, he shall give to the plaintiff or his attorney a notice in writing, signed by the defendant or his attorney, of the defendant's intention so to proceed.

XXXVI. Such notice of sureties shall be accompanied with a true copy of the affidavit of sufficiency, which affidavit shall be in the following form, viz.:—

"In the Court of Bankruptcy, London.

[or, In the Court of Bankruptcy for the district].

"Between — and —.

"A. B. of —, in the, &c., and C. D. of, &c., [adding their place of residence respectively, according to the particulars set forth in Rule XXI], severally make oath and say; and, first, the said A. B. for himself saith, that he is one of the proposed sureties for the above-named defendant, and that he the said A. B. resides at — aforesaid, and that he is worth property to the amount of £— over and above what will pay and satisfy all his just debts and incumbrances; That he is not surety in any manner for the above-named defendant, or any other person, except on the present occasion, [or, if he is surety on any other occasion, substitute for the words underlined the following, "and every other sum for which he is now surety"] that his, the said A. B.'s property, to the amount aforesaid, consists of [here specify the nature and value of the property according to the circumstances of the case, as follows]; stock in trade in his business of a —, carried on by him at —, of the value of £—; of good book debts owing to him to the amount of £—; of furniture in his house at — of the value of £—; of a freehold [or leasehold] farm of the value of £—, situate at —, occupied by —; or of a dwelling-house of the value of £—, situate at —, occupied by —; or of other property, particularizing each description of property, with the value thereof. And the said A. B. further saith, that for the last six months he has resided at — aforesaid, [or if he has resided at several places, then say, "at the following places," particularizing them according to the form of describing place as directed by Rule XXI]. And the above-named deponent C. D., for himself saith, that [here pursue the same form as with respect to the former surety]."

XXXVII. The amount of property so sworn to shall be the sum demanded, fractional parts of a pound excepted, and one-fourth more.

XXXVIII. The plaintiff shall be at liberty, within four days after service of notice of sureties, to except to the proposed sureties or either of them, by delivering a written notice to the defendant or his attorney, to the effect generally that he excepts to such surety (or sureties, as the case may be).

XXXIX. Two days after the service of such notice of exception the defendant or his attorney shall attend at eleven o'clock in the forenoon in open court, with the bond duly stamped, and with an affidavit by the subscribing witness of the execution of such bond; and the plaintiff or his attorney shall be at liberty to oppose the sureties or either of them, upon affidavit, or on the ground of any defect appearing on the face of the proceedings.

XL. The bond shall be taken in a penal sum, to be the amount of double the sum demanded, and shall be executed by the defendant and both sureties to the plaintiff, and the form of the condition shall be as follows:—

"Whereas the said (plaintiff) and one C. D., by their affidavit, sworn and filed in the Court of Bankruptcy [or, in the district Court of Bankruptcy at —], on the — day of —, 184 —, according to an act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of Queen Victoria, intituled, &c., severally deposed as follows: that is to say, the deponent (plaintiff) for himself said [here set forth the affidavit for summons]: and whereas the said court did, upon the filing such affidavit, issue a summons according to the said act, which was duly served on the said (defendant) on the — day of —, in the year 184—: and whereas the said (defendant) upon his appearance to the said summons [or at an enlargement or adjournment of the said summons, as the case may be], refused to admit such demand, and made no deposition, according to the said act, that he believed he had a good defence to such demand [or signed an admission for part only of such demand, viz. the sum of £—, and did not make a deposition according to the said act, that he believed he had a good defence to the residue of such demand]; and whereas the said defendant has requested the said (sureties), as sureties for him, to join him in the present obligation, conditioned as hereinafter appearing, to which they have consented; and the said defendant has given notice thereof to the said plaintiff*:

* If no action be brought, omit the part underlined.

And whereas the said plaintiff hath brought an action at law for recovery of the said demand [or of the residue of the said demand, as the case may be]: now the condition of the above-written obligation is such, that if the said (defendant), his executors or administrators, shall pay such sum or sums to the said (plaintiff), his executors, administrators, or assigns, as shall be recovered in the said action, or any other action which may have been brought or shall hereafter be brought for the recovery of the said demand, [or the said residue of the said demand, as the case may be], together with such costs as shall be given in the same, then the present obligation shall be void, otherwise shall be and remain in full force and virtue."

XLI. Where no notice of exception is served, the defendant or his attorney shall attend in open court on the sixth day after the service of notice of sureties, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, with the bond and affidavit of execution aforesaid, and also with an affidavit of the service of notice of sureties, and an office copy of the affidavit of sufficiency.

XLII. All affidavits used in court shall be filed.

XLIII. In all cases in which any particular number of days is above prescribed, or shall be mentioned in any of these rules and orders, or any other rule or order of court, for the doing of any act, the same shall be reckoned, in the absence of any expression to the contrary, exclusive of the first and inclusive of the last day, unless the last day shall happen to fall on a Sunday, Christmas-day, Good-Friday, or a day appointed for a public fast or thanksgiving, in which case the time shall be reckoned exclusive of that day also.

XLIV. Any writ of attachment, or other writ issued by a subdivision court, or court authorized to act in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy, or an order of such court, for the non-payment of costs, on the deputy registrar's allocatur, shall be sealed with the seal of the Court of Bankruptcy by the chief registrar of such court in Basinghall-street.

XLV. Printed copies of these rules shall be supplied by the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts to the several courts authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in London, and in the several districts in the country, and to the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy in Basinghall-street; and one copy shall be posted up in some conspicuous place in every such court, and in the office of the chief registrar.

Approved,—LYNDEURST, C.

ORDER made by the Right Hon. JOHN SINGLETON Lord LYNDBURST, LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR of GREAT BRITAIN, relating to OFFICIAL ASSIGNEES, under the Provisions of the Statute passed in the Parliament holden in the Fifth and Sixth Years of the Reign of her present Majesty, intituled "AN ACT FOR THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW OF BANKRUPTCY."—12th November 1842.

It is ordered as follows, that is to say,

I. That each official assignee appointed to act as official assignee in bankruptcies prosecuted in the country shall find security to the like amount, and be subject to the same rules in relation thereto, as the official assignees appointed to act in bankruptcies prosecuted in the City of London.—(See Rules 22, 23, and 24, of General Rules and Orders, dated 12th Jan. 1832.)

II. That each official assignee, appointed to act as such in bankruptcies prosecuted in the country, shall be subject to the like prohibition not to carry on any trade or business, or hold or be engaged in any office or employment other than his said office and employment of official assignee, as the official assignees appointed to act in bankruptcies prosecuted in the City of London.—(See Rule 21 of General Rules and Orders, dated 12th Jan. 1832.)

III. That, until further order, the commissioner in the country shall appoint his official assignees to act in rotation under the several bankruptcies prosecuted before him, unless in any case the commissioner shall see cause to the contrary.

IV. That this order in the several matters herein-after mentioned shall from henceforth, except in matters otherwise herein specially directed, apply to every official assignee, whether acting under bankruptcies prosecuted in London or in the country, and to every such bankruptcy.

V. That the official assignee shall, on the 1st January in every year, or within one week then next following, make a declaration in writing, to be filed with the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy in Basinghall-street, that to the best of his knowledge and belief his sureties are alive and solvent, and in such declaration state, to the best of his knowledge and belief, any change of residence of any or either of such sureties.

VI. That the official assignee shall enter in a book, to be called the Register Estate Book, the names of the bankrupts in the commissions and fiats to which he shall have been or shall be appointed.

VII. That the official assignee shall keep the following set of books, in size and form hereinafter referred to: that is to say,

Register Estate Book (No. 1);
 Register Book of Bankrupts' Books, delivered to official assignee under each estate (No. 2);
 Debtor and Property Book; Rough Cash Book;
 Fair Cash Book;
 Rough Journal, } for bills of exchange, securities,
 Fair Journal, } &c.; Ledger; Letter Book;
 Petty Cash and Postage Book;
 Audit Book.

The size of such several books, and of any other books kept by the official assignee in his official capacity, and the form of entry in all such books, to be settled by the accountant in bankruptcy.

VIII. That the official assignee, forthwith after his appointment under any bankrupt's estate, shall sort and number the books, papers, and writings of the bankrupt, with the number of the estate, in the Register Estate Book, and the number of each book, thus:—

(54. (The number of the estate in the Register Estate Book.).

76. (The number of the book, paper, or writing received by the official assignee.)).

and the official assignee shall file a list thereof, with the proceedings, and shall also forthwith after his appointment deliver to the bankrupt a written notice or letter in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed, (No. 1).

IX. That the official assignee shall direct, in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed, (No. 2), the payment of all monies due to any bankrupt's estate from any one person, or from two or more persons being partners, and carrying on business or residing in England, and exceeding in amount the sum of 500*l.*, and all monies being in the hands or under the control of any assignee or assignees chosen by the creditors of any bankrupt's estate to which such official assignee shall have been appointed, into the Bank of England, to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, and for the particular estate to which such money shall belong.

X. That when any money shall be paid into the Bank of England, pursuant to the directions aforesaid, the party so paying such money shall receive a certificate in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed, (No. 3), from one of the cashiers of such bank, of his paying the same, and of its being placed to the account of the accountant in bankruptcy for the proper estate, and a voucher for such payment to be sent by the bank on the same day to the said accountant.

XI. That as soon as conveniently may be after every such payment, the accountant in bankruptcy shall certify in writing to the proper official assignee that such payment has been made, and the name of the bankrupt or bankrupts to the credit of whose estate the money has been placed in the books kept in the office of the accountant in bankruptcy.

XII. That the accountant in bankruptcy and the governor and company of the Bank of England are hereby authorized to make from time to time such further regulations, to be settled by one or more of the commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy acting in London, and subject to the approval of the Lord Chancellor, for facilitating the making of such payments, and certifying the same to the official assignee, as to them shall seem meet.

XIII. That no official assignee shall keep under his control upon any one estate more than 100*l.*, or in the aggregate of monies of bankrupts' estates, more than 1000*l.*, and any excess beyond such sum shall be paid by him forthwith into the Bank of England.

XIV. That the official assignee at the time of paying any monies into the Bank of England shall state in writing, delivered therewith to the cashier of the bank, in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed, (No. 4), the date and amount of the payment, the name of the official assignee making it, the name and description of the bankrupt or bankrupts to whose estate the money belongs, and that it is to be placed to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy; and the official assignee shall take a receipt for the same from the cashier of the bank, and on the same day carry or transmit it to the office of the accountant in bankruptcy, who will give a proper voucher for such receipt, and that the money is placed to the credit of the estate of the said bankrupt or bankrupts in the books kept in the office of the accountant in bankruptcy, such voucher to be produced when called for by the court.

XV. That all monies, without exception, received by the official assignee, and not paid by him forthwith into the Bank of England to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, shall be paid by the official assignee as soon as they shall amount to 100*l.*, into the hands of a banker, with whom such official assignee shall keep an account as such official assignee, such account to be entitled as official assignee, and in which account no monies shall be entered except such as are received by the official assignee in his official capacity.

XVI. That all monies paid into the Bank of England to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy for the estate of any person adjudged bankrupt, or in matters of bankruptcy, shall be subject to the order of a commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, in writing under his hand, and testified by a deputy registrar as to the application thereof; provided that every such order shall specify the amount of any payment to be made by such order, the purpose to which it is to be applied, and the name of the official assignee to whom the same is to be made for such purpose; and in cases where the sum to be paid exceeds 500*l.*, the name of the person beneficially entitled (to whom in such case the payment shall be made), and the accountant in bankruptcy shall and may, pursuant to such order, pay the sum of money specified therein out of such bankrupt's estate by a draft, subscribed to and on the same paper with the said order; such order and draft to be in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed, No. 5).

XVII. That all orders by the commissioner for payment of money, or for the transfer and sale (as hereinafter provided) of any stock or securities, being part of a bankrupt's estate, be signed in triplicate, and that one copy of any such order be filed with the proceedings in the bankruptcy, and that one copy be left at the Bank of England, and that one copy be left with the accountant in bankruptcy.

XVIII. That the official assignee shall, before any audit, enter in the book called the debtor and property book the names of all the debtors to the bankrupt's estate, as returned in his balance sheet, and shall state the reasons why debts are not paid on the opposite page, such book to be produced to the court at every audit.

XIX. That each official assignee shall deposit in the Bank of England, to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, all bills, notes, and other negotiable instruments, except unaccepted bills of exchange, as soon as he shall receive the same; and shall deposit in like manner all unaccepted bills of exchange, as soon as the same shall have been accepted or refused acceptance; and shall at the time of such deposit leave a statement in writing with the cashier of the Bank of England specifying the date and contents of the instruments so deposited, the name of the official assignee making such deposit, the name and description of the bankrupt or bankrupts, and the particular estate to which the same respectively belong, and that such instruments respectively are to be deposited to the credit of the said accountant in bankruptcy; and shall also take a receipt for the same from the cashier of the bank, and carry or transmit it to the office of the said accountant in bankruptcy, who will give a proper voucher, to be produced when called for by the court.

That when and as soon as any bill, note, or other negotiable instrument deposited as aforesaid in the Bank of England in the name of the said accountant shall become due, the Governor and Company of the Bank of England shall, without any direction from the said accountant, deliver such bill, note, or other negotiable instrument to one of the cashiers of the bank, who is to present the same for payment, and receive the sum of money due thereon, and forthwith to pay the sum so received, if any, into the Bank of England, to be there placed to the credit of the said accountant.

That in case any such bill, note, or other negotiable instrument shall not be paid, the said Governor and Company of the Bank of England shall cause such bill, note, or other negotiable instrument as is by law required to be noted and protested to be delivered to a notary for that purpose, and to be noted and protested accordingly, and shall, after the same shall have been so noted and protested, as the case may be, again deposit the same in the Bank of England, to the credit of the said accountant.

And that the said Governor and Company of the Bank of England are forthwith, after every such receipt of money or deposit of any note, bill, or other negotiable instrument, to certify to the said accountant the sum of money received, if any, on each such bill, note, or negotiable instrument, and placed to the credit of the said accountant, or that such bill, note, or other negotiable instrument has been dishonoured; and such dishonoured bill, note, or other negotiable instrument shall be forthwith delivered by the Bank to the proper official assignee.

And that as often as any bill, note, or other negotiable instrument that shall have come to the hands of any official assignee shall have been or shall be dishonoured, such official assignee shall forthwith give such notice thereof as is by law required from the holder of such bill, note, or other negotiable instrument respectively.

XX. That any one of the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy acting in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy may from time to time make order relative to the delivery out to an official assignee of any bill of exchange or promissory note which may stand in the Bank of England to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy for the estate under such fiat; provided that the purpose of such delivery be stated in the order, and such order be testified by a deputy registrar.

XXI. That any one of the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy acting in the prosecution of any fiat in bankruptcy may, as often as it shall appear to him expedient, by order under his hand, (in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed (Nos. 6, 7, and 8)) direct any money which may have been paid into the Bank of England on account of the estate of the bankrupt named in such fiat to be invested in the purchase of Exchequer bills, to be lodged in the Bank of England, and may in like manner direct the sale or exchange of such Exchequer bills, and also the exchange, sale, or transfer of any stock in the public funds or in any public company, or of any Exchequer bills, India bonds, or other public securities which shall have been transferred, delivered, or paid into the Bank of England on account of such bankrupt's estate, and may direct the proceeds thereof to be laid out in the purchase of Exchequer bills, and that such Exchequer bills, when so purchased, be deposited in the Bank of England to the credit of the said accountant for such particular estate; and the said accountant shall and may, pursuant to such order, make such sale, purchase, or transfer without any further order or direction; and the expenses thereof may be charged to the account of the estate for the benefit of which the same shall have been respectively made.

Provided always, that the signature of the commissioner be attested by a deputy registrar, and that the order of the accountant in bankruptcy be subscribed to the order of the commissioner, and on the same paper with the said order.

Provided further, that no stock or public fund be transferred upon any sale, and that no Exchequer bill, India bond, or public security be delivered for the purpose of sale, except to a cashier of the Bank of England, until the price or value thereof be paid into the Bank of England to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy for the particular estate to which it belongs; and that no sum be paid for the purchase of any Exchequer bill, India bond, or other public security, until such Exchequer bill, India bond, or public security be deposited in the Bank of England to the credit of the said accountant in bankruptcy, and for such particular estate.

XXII. That the official assignee shall, within one week after the declaration of a dividend, give notice by advertisement in the London Gazette, and to each creditor by a printed circular letter in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed (No. 9), to be sent through the post-office at the cost of the bankrupt's estate, to be settled by the commissioner, of the time and place of the delivery of the dividend warrants as herein-after provided; and that at such time the official assignee will require the production of such securities, if any, as the creditor exhibited at the time of his proof; and that no dividend warrant will be delivered to the creditor holding any security for his debt until such security shall be produced, without the special directions of a commissioner in that behalf.

XXIII. That this order, so far as relates to the mode of payment of dividends, shall commence and take effect on the 2nd day of January next; and that no dividend under any bankrupt's estate to which an official assignee shall have been appointed shall be declared by any district Court of Bankruptcy until after the said 2nd day of January.

XXIV. That when a dividend has been or may be declared the solicitor to the estate shall forthwith make out three lists of the creditors in alphabetical order, and shall state in separate columns, after the name of each creditor, the amount of his debt, and the dividend to which he is entitled, and in two of such lists the securities exhibited at the time of proof, and shall to each name prefix a number in regular series, together with the date of the order of dividend, according to the form in the schedule hereunto annexed (Nos. 10 and 11), and shall sign such several lists, and shall cause one of such lists which specifies such securities to be filed with the proceedings, and the other of such lists which specifies the securities he shall deliver to the official assignee together with the list not specifying the securities; and the official assignee shall examine and sign the several lists, if correct, and shall prepare books, at the expense of the estate, containing as many blank warrants as may be necessary, according to the form of the schedule hereunto annexed (No. 12), for London, and (No. 13) for the country, and shall number and fill up a warrant for each dividend, and insert in each warrant the name of the creditor to which the number of such warrant is prefixed in the list, and the dividend payable to him, and shall keep the list specifying the securities in his custody, and shall take or send the books containing such warrants, together with the list not specifying the securities, to the accountant in bankruptcy, who shall ascertain that the amount of such warrants does not exceed the sum standing in his name to the credit of the bankrupt's estate, and shall compare the warrants with the lists, and if correct shall certify the same, by affixing the seal of his office, to be provided for that purpose, in the margin of the warrants; and he shall keep in his custody the list of creditors, and return the warrants to the official assignee, for delivery to the creditors as hereinafter mentioned.

XXV. That when a creditor or any person duly authorized under his hand to receive his dividend warrant, shall apply for the same, the official assignee shall require the production of such securities, if any, as the creditor exhibited at the time of his proof, and, if satisfied that the amount of the said dividend still remains due, shall fill up the date in the warrant and receipt, and upon the creditor or such other person authorized as aforesaid signing the receipt the official assignee shall mark the securities, (if any), with the amount of that dividend, and shall sign and deliver the warrant for the same; provided that no dividend warrant shall be delivered to any creditor holding any security for his debt until such security shall be produced: Provided that upon the statement of a creditor that he is unable to produce his security, and that the same has not been parted with for any valuable consideration, nor assigned to any person, he shall be examined on oath before a commissioner as to the cause of such inability, and his examination shall be filed with the proceedings, and the commissioner shall adjudge whether in his opinion the creditor is or is not able to produce the security; and if the commissioner is of opinion that the security cannot for a sufficient cause be produced, the creditor shall give a sufficient indemnity to the official assignee, to be approved by the commissioner, and upon such indemnity being given the official assignee shall deliver the dividend warrant to the creditor.

XXVI. That the payment of the dividend warrant may be obtained by the creditor, or any person duly authorized by him under his hand to receive his dividend, or by the executor or administrator of any such creditor, upon production of the dividend warrant, at the office of the accountant in bankruptcy, or, in a country bankruptcy, at any branch of the Bank of England, or such other bank as shall be named by the Bank of England in that behalf.

That if any other person than the creditor or person duly authorized by him, or the executor or administrator of any such creditor, claim to receive the dividend, the person so claiming the same must obtain an order for payment thereof indorsed upon the warrant by a commissioner under his hand; and if any dividend warrant be above twelve months' date, a like order for payment thereof by a commissioner shall be required: Provided always, that in no case shall any dividend warrant be paid to an official assignee unless such official assignee be the payee, or the executor or administrator of the payee, or the assignee of any bankrupt payee.

XXVII. That when a dividend has been or may be declared under any fiat, the commissioner acting in the prosecution of such fiat may, by order under his hand, testified by a deputy registrar, in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed (No. 14), direct the sum ordered to be divided, or such part thereof as may be required, to be carried from the general account of such estate to an account to be kept in the books of the accountant in bankruptcy, intituled "The Dividend Account," and to the particular estate; provided that when it shall appear, that any part of the money directed to be applied in payment of any dividend is not called for to make such payment, the commissioner may, by order under his hand, testified as aforesaid, and in the forms specified in the schedule hereunto annexed (Nos. 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19), (as the case may be), direct such sum to be carried back to the original account of the estate to which it belonged.

XXVIII. That all dividend warrants under any bankrupt's estate, which shall have been delivered to any official assignee by the accountant in bankruptcy, for more than twelve calendar months, the same having been previously stamped by such accountant, but which shall not have been delivered to any creditor of such estate, shall forthwith, after the expiration of such twelve months, be brought or sent by such official assignee, together with two lists thereof, under each bankrupt's estate, to the said accountant, who shall thereupon compare the warrants with such lists, and cancel such warrants; and one of such lists shall be certified by the said accountant, and returned to the official assignee, who shall file such lists with the proceedings of the respective bankruptcies; and the other of such lists to be retained by the said accountant; and the payment of the dividend to any such creditor to be made in manner to be hereafter ordered by the Lord Chancellor.

XXIX. That the official assignee shall once in every quarter of a year deliver to the court to which he shall be attached, an account, made up to the last day of the preceding month, together with his cash-book and banker's pass-book, duly balanced, and any other books that the commissioner may require; and such account shall shew the balances placed to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, and of every estate under the charge of such official assignee in the books kept in the office of the accountant in bankruptcy, such balances to be certified by the said accountant; and such account shall also shew the balances of every bankrupt's estate then in the hands or under the power or control of the official assignee.

XXX. That such quarterly account shall be kept by the deputy registrar of the court to which such official assignee shall be attached, and shall be open to the inspection of creditors; and that notice shall be given in each court of such account having been delivered, and that any creditor applying to the court may inspect the same without fee, at such convenient time as may be appointed by the court.

XXXI. That all monies, bills of exchange, notes, and other negotiable instruments hereinbefore directed to be paid or delivered to or by the Bank of England, may be paid or delivered to or by the Bank of England by or through any of the branch banks thereof, or any other bank that may be named by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England for that purpose; and all business arising in the country with the Bank of England may, where necessary or convenient, be transacted with the Bank of England by or through any of such branch banks, or other bank so named.

XXXII. That the several forms specified in the schedule hereunto annexed for the several purposes therein stated, and not hereinbefore referred to, be followed in all cases where the same may be applicable.

XXXIII. That if the official assignee shall keep under his control more than 100*l.* of money belonging to any one estate, or more than 1000*l.* in the aggregate of monies belonging to bankrupts' estates, for more than one week, he shall be charged in his accounts by the commissioner with such sum as shall be equal to interest at the rate of 20*l.* per cent. on the excess of the said sum of 100*l.* or 1000*l.*, as the case may be, for such time as such money shall be under his control beyond the said week; and, unless the money has been kept from proper causes, the official assignee shall be dismissed from his office, upon the report of the commissioner, or upon petition to the Lord Chancellor by the creditors' assignee or assignees, or by any creditor, and be liable to costs and expenses, and have no claim to remuneration.

XXXIV. That, subject to the provisions of this order, the official assignee shall follow the directions of the commissioner under whom he shall act.

XXXV. That all forms relating to the payment or delivery into or out of the Bank of England of any money, bills, notes, or other securities under commissions and fiats in bankruptcy prosecuted in the country be printed in red ink.

XXXVI. That printed copies of this Order, and of the Rules herein referred to, shall be supplied by the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts to the several courts authorized to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in London, and in the several districts in the country, and also to the accountant in bankruptcy, the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and the chief registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy, and each official assignee; and that one such copy of this Order be posted up in some conspicuous place in every such court, and in the respective offices of the accountant in bankruptcy, chief registrar, and official assignees.

SCHEDULES.

No. 1.

Form of Letter to Bankrupt forthwith after Appointment of Official Assignee.

Sir,

[Residence and date].

HAVING been appointed official assignee to your estate, I have to inform you that the Court requires you to make out and deliver to me immediately—

1st.—A list of all your creditors (alphabetically arranged) and of liabilities on bills of exchange, as acceptor, drawer, or indorser, and any other engagement provable under your estate. [If any creditor has received your acceptance, or note of hand, or any other bill, with your name as drawer or indorser, or any other security, goods, or property, on account of his debt, state the particulars against his name.—This list is required within a week from this day].

2ndly.—A list of all the debtors to your estate. [State the name and present residence of the debtor; and the sum due, distinguishing those you consider to be bad or doubtful, or that are disputed.—If the debtor has been bankrupt, state if the debt has been proved, and if any, and what dividends have been received by you.—If you hold or have received any security from the debtor, state its nature].

3rdly.—A statement of rent, taxes, and rates due by you up to the quarter-day preceding your bankruptcy, with an account of all sums due for salaries and wages, and the rate per year, month, or week.

4thly.—A statement of the probable value of your stock in trade, leasehold property in houses, lands, or buildings, or any other property in your possession or control, or in the possession of others, on which you have received any advances, or have an interest. [State if the stock and premises are insured from fire, in what office, to what extent, and when the insurance expires, and who holds the policy].

You will also inform me, if there are in your custody, or in the custody of any other person, any books, papers, or documents belonging to your estate, not already taken by the messenger; and the Court requires that you attend from day to day at my office, to make up and balance your books, and prepare a balance-sheet for the purpose of passing your last examination, and which must be filed at least ten days before the day appointed for the last examination, being the — day of —. I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

To Mr. —, —, Official Assignee.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

6 VICTORIA—Nov. 15, 1842.

This Court will, on Saturday the 20th and Monday the 28th days of November instant, also on Saturday the 3rd day of December next, hold Sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the business in the New Trial Paper, Crown Paper, and Special Paper, and in giving judgment in cases that may then be pending.

By THE COURT.

BANKRUPTCY COURT.—The death of Sir John Cross, which took place very suddenly at his residence on the 5th inst., has enabled the Government to abolish the separate jurisdiction in matters of Bankruptcy, by restoring it again to the Chancery Court. Vice-Chancellor Sir James Lewis Knight Bruce was accordingly, on Thursday last, sworn in before the Lord Chancellor, in the Court of Chancery, as Chief Justice of the Court of Bankruptcy. By her Majesty's letters patent his Honor is invested with all the rights and authority of the office, but without any additional salary. The patent directs that his Honor is to be admitted to the office without the payment of any fees or fines whatever; and also states that the Right Hon. Mr. Justice Keble, late Chief Justice in Bankruptcy, had formally resigned that office.

CHANCERY REPORTS.

This day is published, Vol. 1, Part 3, with Index &c., completing the Vol. price 14s.

REPORTS of CASES argued and determined in the HIGH COURT of CHANCERY in IRELAND, during the time of Lord Chancellor SUGDEN; commencing with Michaelmas Term, 1841. By HENRY CONNOR and JAMES A. LAWSON, Esqrs., Barristers at Law.

"This number of those valuable and accurate Reports completes the first volume, and we feel fully justified in recommending them to our readers. In our former volume we were induced to hazard an opinion that these Reports would be the Reports of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, in which opinion we have been, to a great extent, borne out by the approbation which has been bestowed upon it by the profession, both in this country and in England; their success is now past all doubt, and we have to congratulate ourselves in bringing these Reports under the notice of the profession, both here and in England. The number contains upwards of 250 pages, besides a very copious index, table of cases cited and reported, and a title-page. It is altogether, both as to matter, and the manner in which the work has been sent to the public, highly creditable to Ireland."—Legal Reporter, Nov. 5.

IMPORTANT AND SALUTARY IMPROVEMENTS have been introduced into the practice of Life Assurance by this Company. All the advantages peculiar to mutual life assurance, arising from a division amongst the assured of the whole of the mutual profits, and that security and freedom from responsibility which proprietary companies can alone afford, are combined by the constitution of this, the only guaranteed Mutual Society.

By a half-premium credit system, one-half of the premiums may be retained for the first seven years, and repaid at the convenience of the assured; and by the ascending scale a greatly diminished rate of premium is required for the first twelve years, combining the advantages of an assurance for the whole duration of life with the economy of a temporary policy.

By the Deed of Constitution, all policies issued by this Company are declared to be INDEFEASIBLE and INDISPUTABLE, unless obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation, which renders them peculiarly valuable as documents of security.

COMMISSION.—The solicitor who transacts an assurance with this Company, is held to be the agent of the policy during its currency, and receives the usual commission upon all the future premiums, by whomsoever they may be paid.

Prospectuses, schedules, and every information requisite to enable parties to effect assurances, will be forwarded, free of expense, by the agents or manager.

Most of our readers will probably remember some remarks in the Times newspaper a short time since, which were suggested by the circumstance of a clergyman refusing to disclose at a coroner's inquest a confession which had been made to him in his spiritual capacity. The writer of those remarks abstained from entering upon the legal part of the subject, and confined himself to stating the moral and political reasons against compelling, or if we remember rightly, even permitting such disclosures. As the subject is one of considerable importance, especially to persons of the Roman Catholic religion, we have been induced to take up the legal part of it, and to lay before our readers such materials for forming an opinion upon it as we have been able to find in the books. The law is thus stated by Buller, J., in Wilson v. Rastall, (4 T. R. 759): "The privilege is confined to the cases of counsel, solicitor, and attorney. . . . It is indeed hard in many cases to compel a friend to disclose a confidential conversation; and I should be glad if by law such evidence could be excluded. . . . I take the distinction to be now well settled, that the privilege extends to those three enumerated cases at all times, but that it is confined to these cases only. There are cases to which it is much to be lamented, that the law of privilege is not extended—those in which medical persons are obliged to disclose the information which they acquire by attending in their professional characters. This point was very much considered in the Duchess of Kingston's case, (20 Howell's St. Tr. 572), where Sir C. Hawkins, who had attended the duchess as a medical person, made the objection himself, but was overruled, and compelled to give evidence against the prisoner." Our readers will observe, that although Mr. Justice Buller considered the law as to privileged communications to be thus restricted, his opinion inclined towards extending it; and that the case of a clergyman is not expressly alluded to. Probably this arose from the point having never been distinctly raised, as in the case of a medical person it had been; and the attention of the judges was only directed to those cases which had been actually discussed. We say the point respecting the clergyman had never been distinctly raised, because no allusion is made to such a case in Wilson v. Rastall; and if it had ever been before the court, it would scarcely have escaped the notice of both the judges and counsel in that case. However, in Du Barre v. Livette, (Peake's N. P. C. 77), Garrow, who argued for the plaintiff, cited a case of Rex v. Sparkes, as having then been lately determined by Mr. Justice Buller on the Northern Circuit, in which a Papist had made a confession before a Protestant clergyman of the crime for which he was indicted, and that confession was permitted to be given in evidence on the trial, and he was convicted and executed. Upon this Lord Kenyon observed, that he should have paused before he admitted the evidence: then admitted. And he also remarked, that the Popish religion was then unknown to the law of this country; nor was it necessary for the prisoner to make that confession to aid him in his defence. Mr. Anstey, in his work on the Laws affecting Roman Catholics, lately published, supposes that there must be a mistake in the report with respect to the clergyman being a Protestant; as it is evident, from Lord Kenyon's remark, that the confession was made to a Roman Catholic clergyman. Such very probably was the fact, and Mr. Anstey thence argues that the decision proceeded on the ground stated by Lord Kenyon, that the law did not then recognise that religion, and therefore would not allow any privilege to its members; which reason having now been removed, the case is no longer of any authority. This is one answer to it; but another, more important perhaps, still remains. We are inclined to doubt whether such a decision was ever made, and to suppose that Garrow was under some mistake when he cited it. The case of Du Barre v. Livette was tried at the sittings after Trinity Term, 1791, and Rex v. Sparkes is said to have been lately decided. Wilson v. Rastall was decided in the Trinity Term of the following year, and yet Justice Buller makes no allusion to his having given such a decision, or to the case of a clergyman at all. It seems scarcely probable that he could so soon have forgotten a case tried before himself in which so novel a point had been raised. This circumstance, although not conclusive, deserves much consideration in determining upon the authority of R. v. Sparkes. Gilham's case (1 R. & M.C.C. 186) is cited by Mr. Roscoe (Ev. in Civil Cases, 124) as an authority, that confessions made to a clergyman are not privileged; and other writers appear to have viewed it in the same light. Mr. Anstey endeavours to distinguish it from the case of a Roman Catholic clergyman; and we shall presently see that Best, C. J., thought it was a decision on this point. It seems to us however that this is a mistaken view of that case. The marginal note is—"A confession made in consequence of persuasion by a clergyman, not with any view of temporal benefit, is admissible." It does not appear from this to whom the confession was made, although at first sight it might be supposed to have been made to the clergyman; and the real question appears to have been, whether the motive to the confession was such as would affect its admissibility. And such our readers will, on perusing the report, find to have been the case. The chaplain of the gaol in which the prisoner was confined had two interviews with him, during which he urged him to a confession as a religious duty. The prisoner did not make any confession to the chaplain; but the confessions in question were made to the gaoler of the prison after the interviews with the chaplain, and no doubt in consequence of what had passed at those interviews, and subsequently in a formal manner to a magistrate. The argument of the prisoner's counsel proceeds entirely upon the ground, that what passed between the prisoner and the chaplain was such an inducement to the former to make the confession, as to take away from it the character of being free and voluntary; and the argument for the crown treats the question in the same manner. Indeed, it is obvious that it could not be contended that the confessions to the gaoler and the magistrate were confidential communications.

That this was the view of the case taken by both parties, is clear also from the use which they made in their argument of the case we are about to notice. The prisoner's counsel, whose duty it was to insist upon the clergyman's privilege, if it had really existed, cited a case of R. v. Radford, in which a clergyman had prevailed on the prisoner to confess, by dwelling on the heinousness of the crime charged against him, and the denunciations of Scripture against it, without giving him any caution that it would be used in evidence against him; and he said that Best, C. J., refused to allow the clergyman to state the confession, saying, that he thought it dangerous, after the confidence thus created, which would throw the prisoner off his guard, and the impression thus produced, to allow what he then said to be given in evidence against him; and he argued that the evidence could not have been excluded on account of the breach of confidence, as the contrary had been decided in R. v. Sparkes. On the other hand, the counsel for the crown, alluding to R. v. Radford, said, that the judge "thought it was improper in that case in the clergyman to violate the confidence reposed in him by the prisoner, and expressed a strong opinion to that effect." We think we may therefore fairly pronounce, that R. v. Gilham is no authority on this point, and that it would seem, that, in R. v. Radford, the privilege of the clergyman was recognised. One more dictum remains to be noticed. In Broad v. Pitt, (3 C. & P. 519), Best, C. J., said, "The privilege does not apply to clergymen, since the decision the other day in the case of Gilham. I, for one, will never compel a clergyman to disclose communications made to him by a prisoner, but if he chooses to disclose them, I shall receive them in evidence." The learned judge seems, as we before observed, to have misapprehended the decision in Gilham's case. But for that, his opinion appears to have been strongly in favour of the privilege. Having thus, as we proposed, stated to our readers all that we have been able to find bearing upon the legal part of this subject, we will leave it in their hands; for, upon a point of so much doubt, and which will probably soon receive a judicial determination, we think it better to abstain from giving any opinion of our own.

ON THE NEW ORDERS IN CHANCERY.

We understand that a question has been raised, whether, under the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103, which abolishes the office of the Six Clerks and substitutes the Clerks of Records and Writs in their stead, and under the New Orders in Chancery, it is obligatory on each defendant or set of defendants appearing separately to take an office copy of the bill. This, in many cases, will be an important question with reference to the immediate outlay which is required for the prosecution of the defence to a lengthy bill, as well as to the ultimate amount of costs to be paid by the unsuccessful party. We will suppose a bill of 200 folios, which is not a very unusual length; to this bill there are eight defendants, of whom six, being in the same interest with or otherwise amicably disposed to the plaintiff, appear by three different solicitors. The expense of an office copy of the bill to each set of these defendants, would, according to the present rate of charge by the official stationers of the court, amount to 8*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*: so that if the plaintiff were allowed to furnish the parties with a copy of the bill, there would be saved to them an aggregate expense of 25*l.*; or if they might take one office copy between them, there would be a saving of 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* In such a case it is rather difficult to see what necessity there could be for compelling each or either of the parties to take an office copy of the bill. It would be the interest of all parties to take care that a correct copy is furnished to the defendants. The plaintiff is the person who would be most prejudiced by an incorrect copy being used; but he would have his remedy by taking exceptions for insufficiency, if the answers should through such means be defective; and thus even if the parties were not disposed to deal bonâ fide with each other, (which it is absurd to suppose), each looking to his own advantage would take care to ascertain the accuracy of the copy. No valid objection therefore could arise on the ground of the possible incorrectness of non-official copies. The objection indeed would be taken, and to those who have no practical acquaintance with the subject would appear plausible enough; but to those who have that acquaintance, it is well known that office copies, under the old system at least, had no very strong claim to superior accuracy.

There can be but one opinion as to the advantage which the suitors, and particularly the defendants, would derive from the introduction of a new rule of practice, which would admit of the parties obtaining, in what way they may be able, copies of the bill which they are called upon to answer. But the question is, whether the new system has introduced such a new rule, or rather whether it has abolished the old one. We are inclined to think that it has not; and in order to shew the ground of our opinion, we will shortly refer to the old practice, and to the alterations which have been effected by the new statute and the Orders which have been promulgated thereunder.

According to the old practice, each defendant, or each set of defendants, where more than one appeared by the same Clerk in Court at the same time, was bound to take an office copy of the bill. The only exceptions to this rule were those of a person entitled to the privilege of peerage, who is served with a copy of the bill at the same time that he is served with the letter missive, and of a defendant being in custody under Sir E. Sugden's Act (1 Will. 4, c. 36, s. 15, rule 14) for contempt in not appearing, who, if he is able to put in his answer by borrowing or obtaining a copy of the bill without taking an office copy, is not compellable to take any such office copy. It is difficult to ascertain how this rule of practice originated. There is, we believe, no positive rule of court now extant upon which it can be said to be founded, unless indeed it can be referred to an Order of the Court made in the year 1691, by which it was ordered, "that when and so often as any solicitor should at the hearing of any cause in this Court produce and offer to be read any pleadings or proofs not duly signed by the proper officer, for so doing such cause should not only be put off from hearing, but the solicitor should pay to the other party 5*l.* costs for that day's attendance." (Bea. Ord., p. 239). This Order, we should have thought, could have had application to such office copies only as the parties might wish to read at the hearing, and did not entail on them the necessity of taking any other office copies; and if they were provided with them when the cause came to a hearing, it would seem that the requisitions of the Order were complied with. This would have been perhaps reasonable, and would obviously have spared the parties much expense; for a suit may never come to a hearing, or it may not be heard for several years after the bill is filed, during which time the parties who have paid for their office copies, or most probably their solicitors, who have paid for them on their behalf, will have to lie out of their money thus unprofitably expended. The custom, however, had grown into an absolute rule of practice, which the interest of the Six Clerks taught them most rigidly to enforce. It was an abuse perhaps, but it had grown into a right; it was an oppressive claim, but it rested on the foundation of long enjoyment and non-resistance. Be this as it may, it had the sanction, and had become a Rule of the Court; for we find that, by the 14th Rule of Sir E. Sugden's Act, before referred to, although the defendant may, if he can, borrow or obtain a copy of the bill without taking an office copy, he shall not be compellable to take such office copy; but that the Clerk in Court may (if he think that the defendant is of sufficient ability to pay for an office copy) require him, before his answer is filed, to make an affidavit denying his ability, in consequence of poverty, to pay for an office copy of the bill; so that, not only was the practice sanctioned by implication, as it would have been if the first part of this Rule, which said that the defendant should not under certain circumstances be compellable to take an office copy, had stood alone; but the Rule expressly saves what it thus acknowledges to be the right of the Six Clerks, by giving him the power of making the defendant swear as to his inability to pay for an office copy; and of course if he could not so swear, it would have compelled him to take one. The Rule therefore, which required each defendant, or set of defendants, to take an office copy, was not merely the practice of the Six Clerks office, but the practice of the Court itself.

We have to consider whether the new act, and the Orders made in pursuance of it, have varied or abrogated the practice in this respect.

The 1st section of the act abolishes the office of Six Clerk. The 3rd section transfers the management of the records and writs to officers to be denominated Clerks of Records and Writs, and the places, times, and manner in which their business shall be conducted shall be such as the Master of the Rolls shall from time to time by any order direct. The 21st section enacts, that except so far as they may be altered by the Lord Chancellor, with the advice of the other Judges, all fees for business theretofore done by the Six Clerks, and which shall be done by any officer of the court, shall continue payable; but that they shall be paid into the "Suitors' Fee Fund Account." The 31st section enables the Lord Chancellor, with the advice &c., to make and issue such orders as he shall think fit, as well in relation to any matter connected with the abolished offices, as for carrying the provisions of the act into execution; and also to make and issue such other rules and orders, not being inconsistent with the provisions of the act, as he shall think fit, for the performance of the business theretofore done in the abolished offices, and settling the practice of the offices thereby created.

These are the only sections of the act which can possibly affect the question; and it is clear that the effect of them is merely to transfer the management of the records and writs to new officers, subject to such rules as the Lord Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls may make and issue for their guidance. There is nothing to be found in them which points to a new practice, unless a new practice shall be established by the rules to be made in pursuance of the act.

Let us then look to the Orders of the 26th of October last, and see whether any alteration as to the point in question is effected by them. The 3rd Order is the only one which relates to the point, and it provides, that the duties of the Six Clerks, in relation to the filing, custody, copying, and amending of all informations, bills, demurrers, pleas, answers, and other pleadings and records, shall be performed by the Clerks of Records and Writs. The 32nd Order relates to the amount of fees to be taken for office copies, which, by the second schedule thereby referred to, is fixed at 10*d.* per folio.

There is nothing to be found in these Orders which will carry the case any further. They leave the management of the records and writs, and the rules of practice concerning them, so far as the suitor is concerned, in the same state as it was in before the act was passed. The custody of them is indeed transferred to new officers of the court, whose duties in this particular instance are the same as those of their predecessors—the Six Clerks. They are to be the stationers of the court, and the only difference is, that, instead of putting their earnings into their own pockets, they must hand them over to the Suitors' Fund. There is nothing to be found in the act or in the Orders which will lead to the conclusion, that the intention of them was to lighten the suitor's burden, by lowering the rate of the charges which are to fall upon him; on the contrary, it is apparent that their object is to enhance the amount of those charges, in order to meet the extraordinary expenses which the new establishment will occasion.

Our opinion therefore is, that each defendant or each set of defendants must still, as heretofore, take an office copy of the bill. The argument on the other side may, perhaps, have some force; it is said, that such a rule was a gross abuse which had grown up in the Six Clerks' office, and was peculiar to it; and that that office being abolished, its abuses must go with it. But to this argument we think the answer is as above stated; that it was not only a rule of the office, but that it had received the sanction and had become a part of the practice of the court. That the late statute has merely substituted new officers in the place of the Six Clerks, who shall work more immediately under the superintendence, and form a more direct part of the court; but that it did not effect, nor was it intended to effect any alteration in the practice by which the old system was regulated, further than as that practice might be altered by any orders which the Judges of the Court are by the Act empowered to make; and that no such alteration has been brought about by any order which has yet appeared. No doubt the Judges have the power of altering the practice in this (or in any other) respect; but they have not yet done so; and if it should be thought expedient to discontinue the practice, which forces expensive and sometimes useless copies upon the defendants, (and who can doubt the expediency of such a step, so far as the suitor is concerned, and its consequent inexpediency in regard to the Suits' Fund?) we apprehend that it must be done by a special order to be issued under the powers given for that purpose by the Act.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—THIRD EDITION.

In 3 vols., royal 8vo., 4l. 14s. 6d. boards.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of EVIDENCE and DIGEST of PROOFS in CIVIL and CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS. Third Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions. By THOS. STARKIE, Esq., of the Inner Temple, one of her Majesty's Counsel.

"There are now two general treatises on this extensive and intricate branch of Law, Mr. Starkie's and Mr. Phillipps's, of which it is not too much to say, that they excel all the text books of the day in the combination of learning and research with clear method and scientific precision. Mr. Phillipps's work, however, (that is to say, the last edition—which was published in 1838), labours under this disadvantage, that it is confined to an examination of the general principles of Evidence, and does not treat of the rules applicable to particular subjects and actions, otherwise than as they illustrate those general principles. Mr. Starkie on the other hand, reserving the first part of his work chiefly for the discussion of general principles, devotes two closely printed volumes to a Digest, alphabetically arranged, of the Rules of Evidence and the proof applicable to particular subjects and actions. It is in this that the great practical superiority and utility of Mr. Starkie's book consist."—The Jurist, No. 269.

LONDON, DECEMBER 3, 1842.

IN a former volume of THE JURIST, (vol. 4, p. 593), we offered some observations on the nature and extent of the privilege of counsel in regard to the conduct of criminal proceedings. We did not then think it necessary to extend the inquiry into the question, what is the duty of counsel generally—an inquiry which seemed at the time purely theoretical; but circumstances have recently occurred, which have occupied some considerable portion of public attention, and which involve the general question so far, as to make it appear to us to be now fitting that we should inquire, what is the privilege and what is the duty of counsel in regard to proceedings in civil matters of litigation. The question that has been lately mooted is in substance, (as probably most of our readers are aware), whether, to any and what extent, counsel is required, by his duty to the public, personally to take cognizance of the propriety of the conduct of his client in using one or other of those processes which a Court of Law or Equity permits, and of the accuracy of those statements on which his client instructs him.

It must be admitted, we think, by all who have sought to inform themselves of the true position and functions of the Bar, that counsel are not merely the organs of their clients, bound to see with their eyes and speak with their tongues; that they owe a duty to the Court in which they practise, and through it to the public, as well as to their clients, is most certain; and he would indeed be ill apprised of the position in which he is placed as counsel, who should imagine, that, in civil cases, any more than in criminal ones, all that he has to do is to struggle for his client, regardless of the consequences that may ensue to every other individual and to every other institution. That this is the doctrine we may collect, not less from what has fallen occasionally from Judges, than from the invariable practice in many particulars. "If (said Lord Langdale, in reference to the rule laid down by his Lordship with regard to hearing causes as short causes) the counsel had stated, that, in their opinion, the cause was not proper to be heard as a short cause, I should have reposed implicit confidence in their honour, and considered their statement as a sufficient reason to refuse the application . . . With respect to the task which I may be considered to have imposed upon counsel, I wish to observe, that it arises from the confidence which long experience induces me to repose in them, and from a sense which I entertain of the truly honourable and important services which they constantly perform as ministers of justice, acting in aid of the Judge before whom they practise. No counsel supposes himself to be the mere advocate or agent of his client to gain a victory, if he can, on a particular occasion. The zeal and arguments of every counsel, knowing what is due to himself and his honourable profession, are qualified not only by considerations affecting his own character as a man of honour, experience, and learning, but also by considerations affecting the general interests of justice. It is to these considerations that I apply myself; and I am far from thinking that any counsel who attends here will knowingly violate, or silently permit to be violated, any established rule of the Court, to promote the purposes of any client, or refuse to afford me the assistance which I ask in these cases." (Hutchinson v. Stephens, 1 Kee. 667, 668). Other passages to the same effect might be cited, and the practice is accordingly, since we constantly see, that the Court places in counsel a confidence, for which the only warrant is the knowledge, that it is the duty of counsel, and that counsel so feel and understand it, to assist and not to mislead the Court. Thus, it is every day's practice, that judicial orders are made on the mere assertion of counsel that the affidavits make a proper case for them. ANN settled and not unfrequent practice of counsel, in acting as amici curiæ, a practice much disapproved by the most learned Judges, is another proof that the Court expects from them as a duty to assist public justice, by informing the Court, whether professionally engaged or not. Counsel, therefore, are undoubtedly not the mere agents of their clients, and are bound to exercise over the conduct of the cases intrusted to them some sort of control. But the question, to what extent they are bound to exercise such control, is one of considerable difficulty. Upon that point, perhaps, only some general principles can be stated as fixed, and the propriety or impropriety of the particular way in which they are applied, must frequently depend on the special circumstances of each case.

The general doctrine which it has been attempted lately to put forth on this subject, seems to go the length of saying, not merely that counsel are to exercise their own judgment and a wholesome control if necessary over their clients, in the mode of placing before the court their client's case; not merely that they are to keep in view the spirit, rather than the letter of the rules of pleading and practice, and are not to convert that license in pleading, which has been intended for the protection of one party, into an oppression on the other;—not even that they are to content themselves with inquiring into the propriety of the particular kind of remedy, for the attainment of which they are instructed to take steps; but that they are actually called upon to sift and question the accuracy of those statements of facts which constitute their instructions; that they are to form an ex parte judgment whether their clients have pursued a moral course in selecting one kind of legal remedy in preference to another;—in fact, to satisfy themselves that their client is not actuated by improper motives, and has adopted a course of proceeding unobjectionable on grounds of moral rectitude.

If this be indeed the duty of counsel, then high as we are disposed to place the standard of our professional duty, and, heavy as we have always been disposed to consider the responsibilities attaching to us, we must confess that a counsel is a much more exalted and a much more responsible person than we had ever, in our fondest conceptions of the dignity of our profession, imagined. Indeed, if such be really the duty of counsel, we do not see that there is any need at all for solicitors and attorneys, and not much for judges. For, according to this doctrine, counsel are called upon to usurp the functions of both. But it is plain, that in fact such is not the duty of counsel. The collection of information from the litigant as to all those matters of fact on which questions of law arise, is clearly in the department of the solicitor. He alone can conveniently, according to the course of practice, come in close and frequent contact with the litigant, and to him alone must be entrusted the examination of his conduct, on which depends any inference as to the motives with which legal process is sought to be set in motion, and of the objects which are aimed at by setting it in motion. It is also we conceive the undoubted right of the party, and of his immediate agent the solicitor, to select, where several remedies at Law or in Equity are equally open to him, that one which appears to him for any reason most advantageous or convenient. And we cannot imagine on what ground it can be contended, that counsel are bound, or have even any shadow of right, to dictate to a client, on any preconceived notions of their own, that he shall proceed by action at Law instead of suit in Equity, or vice versa; or that he shall take one particular course of application to any court, when many are open to him.

Suppose, for instance, a case of this nature, that a party files a bill in equity against another, and that the defendant might meet it either by answer or by demurrer. If counsel is instructed to prepare an answer, is it his duty to decline doing so, because he may think fit to conceive that a demurrer would be less expensive to the defendant, and less oppressive as against the plaintiff? Is it his duty to cross-examine his client as to his motives for preparing a defence by answer, or has he not arrived at the boundary-line of his duty, when he has advised his client, that to defend by demurrer will have the same effect as to answer and go on to a hearing? Again, suppose an application for protection to be, as it is in many cases, susceptible of being made in a short way by action at law, or in a longer and more costly way by suit in equity: Is it the duty of counsel, if instructed to draw a bill, to impute to his client improper motives for the selection of the proceeding by suit? or is he, even if he have suspicion of such improper motives, required, or even authorized, to do more than point out to his client that he may obtain his relief in the shorter and cheaper form?

We apprehend there is no ground for asserting that counsel have any such authority or duty. To suppose that he is bound so to interfere, is to constitute him at once attorney and counsel for the party; it is to commit to him not merely the duty of advising on the law applicable to a certain assumed state of circumstances, or of conducting applications to the court according to its rules and practice, but of ascertaining whether the statements made to him are correct: in other words, of himself examining the party. It is arming him with the power which the law has given to the litigant, and through him to his immediate agent, viz. that of choosing his own remedy. It is imposing upon him the duty of determining whether it is moral or conscientious for the litigant to do that which the law permits him to do; and with very inadequate means of ascertaining whether his impressions are correct or not, to give them the effect of depriving such litigant of the assistance of counsel, which, as a suitor, he is intended and properly entitled to have; lastly, it involves a sweeping and most harsh calumny on an entire branch of the profession, by assuming, that, though an attorney may be trusted as an individual, he has no claim, in right of his professional character, to expect from counsel, that prima facie integrity and honourable motives shall be imputed to him.

The rule as to where the duty of the solicitor terminates, and that of the counsel begins, we apprehend to be this—that the solicitor is intrusted with the care of collecting the facts, of ascertaining and placing before the litigant a statement of what remedies are open to him, and of determining with or for him (assuming that they have both full knowledge of the general effect of each kind of remedy) which of the several remedies open to him he will select. For the propriety of the course adopted, both as regards the interest of the party himself, and the question whether he is or is not abur-ing the procedure of the Court, he and his agent are responsible.

When the solicitor thus prepared instructs counsel, the latter is, we conceive, not at liberty in general to question either the correctness of his instructions as to facts, or their propriety as to selection of remedy, provided the remedy selected be one to which the party, if his statement of facts is correct, is legally entitled. It is for him to bring before the Court the case made by his client, according to the tenor of his instructions; and here we apprehend, and not before, begins his duty in controlling the proceedings of his client. What the duty of counsel is, when once set in motion, and how far he is to consider himself, in the words of Lord Langdale, a minister of public justice, we have already endeavoured to point out; and amply sufficient is the responsibility attached to that duty. To extend it to a control over the consciences of the litigant and the solicitor, from the very commencement of proceedings, is not, we submit, warranted by the usage of the profession; and any attempt to do so would be fraught with mischief. It would entail on counsel an almost intolerable amount of responsibility: it would entirely remove the responsibility of the solicitor: and, lastly, it would be wholly inefficacious in the only cases in which it could be of the slightest value, viz. where fraud or injustice is really intended.

A Treatise on Wills. By THOMAS JARMAN, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. In 2 vols. Vol. 1. [Sweet.]

This is a book which it is scarcely worth while to review; the reputation of its author is now so well established by his edition of Powell on Devises, that he is alike beyond the fear of our censure, and the need of our approval. Still it is pleasant to ponder awhile over a book of this kind; nor is it altogether useless to trace the progress of a successful author, and to observe his feats of mental vigour, though one may neither possess his natural genius, nor altogether emulate his untiring industry.

It is now fifteen years since Mr. Jarman made his appearance before the public, not venturing at that time to put forth his essay on Wills on its own unaided merits, but cutting part of it into fragments, to adorn a new edition of Mr. Powell, for the sake of the privilege of introducing the residue in the shape of a second volume "On the Construction of Devises." This was no doubt the wisdom of the bookseller; and the name of Mr. Powell having tardily sold a few copies, the merits of Mr. Jarman at length sold off the rest, and caused a demand for a new edition. This demand has been wisely supplied by the Treatise on Wills, which we now review, and the second volume of which we patiently await. Very little identity will be perceived between the notes to Powell on Devises, and the matter of the new treatise. Much of it is quite new; the rest consists of portions of the old work reconsidered and rewritten. The author, however, is plainly the same. Very little, if anything, we venture to say, has been left to the hands of any pupil or compiler, however skilful; and along with the rest of our profession, we beg to tender to Mr. Jarman our best thanks for this new effort of his genius, an effort which completely establishes his title as an original thinker, an able writer, and of course far better than all, the author of the best practical text-book on the Law of Wills.

The order of the work is natural and easy. Though consisting of twenty-seven chapters, it falls into four great natural divisions; the first of which, from chapter 1 to 10 inclusive, comprehends all that happens prior to the death of the testator, the place of making his will, the nature and fashion of it, the capacity of the testator, his devisable property, the objects of his bounty, the modes of execution, revocation, and republication, how far the testator's power extends, and from what time his will speaks, each of which various items has a chapter of its own, wherein its own peculiarities are severally discussed. The second great division which we think that we perceive, comprehends from chapter 11 to 19 inclusive, and appears to comprise all those cases in which there is something wanting, either a living legatee as in chapter 11, or an intelligible bequest as in chapter 12, unless made out by parol evidence in chapter 13, or set right by election as in chapter 14. There may be a want of congruity, as in chapter 15; or want of a word, as in chapter 16; or a want of precision in general, giving rise to estates by implication, a resulting trust for the heir, or a constructive conversion, subjects with which chapters 17, 18, and 19 are severally occupied. The next division has a generality about it, and contrasts with those cases in which something is wanting, by including all those cases of general gifts, in which more is expressed than may be absolutely necessary; and it accordingly comprises a chapter on the operation of a general devise, (chapter 20), connected with which is the subject of devises by mortgagees and trustees, (chapter 21), and two further chapters on the general words which will respectively comprise real and personal estate. The last division brings you fairly into the midst of your will, and commences with a chapter (chapter 24) on the force and extent of particular words of description, goes on to the discussion of vested, contingent, and executory estates, and ends with a chapter on conditions; with which the present volume terminates. There is a great deal in the order of a book. For a book of reference an intelligible order of arrangement gives great facility; and for a readable book, it has the advantage of leading one gradually on from one subject to another, in a manner the best calculated to beguile the journey, and impress on the memory the different objects as they pass in review. Each subject as it is severally discussed and dismissed, prepares the mind for the comprehension of the next, as well as awakens a wish to examine and understand it. How different the progressive and natural order of Mr. Jarman, from that of the great conveyancer, who began a treatise on his art with the intricate subject of common recoveries, simply because it happened to stand first in his pupil's book of common forms! A clear and intelligible arrangement of diversified, yet similar subjects, is the work only of a master-hand, strong enough to hold them all at once, and skilful enough at the same time to divide them according to their various common qualities.

Having thus reviewed, first Mr. Jarman, next his title-page, and then his table of contents, let us now look into the body of the work, and see what it is that such a man, in such a book, in such well-ordered chapters, has actually produced. Here, however, we should undertake a subject much too large for our limits, did we attempt any thing like an account of all that is to be found in the volume. Moreover, we should, perhaps, weaken the already-formed good intentions of the reader to see for himself, and form his own opinion. Presuming, therefore, that our readers intend to peruse the book itself, we shall now venture to mention to them a point or two in which, in our very humble judgment, some of our author's positions might with advantage be modified or explained, in order that our cordial recommendation may not mislead any one into the opinion, either that this text-book, unlike any other, is infallible, or that we think it so. There is no good without its attendant evil; and one of the evils attending an original investigation is, that it is more likely to lead into occasional error than no investigation at all. A blunder in a mere copyist is unpardonable, but a mistake by one who has no precedent to follow, may more readily be forgiven. A writer of a law treatise ought to be a person able and willing to give himself the trouble of thinking, over and above the mechanical labour of compiling; and if he can and will undertake to do so, an error or two may be pardoned for the sake of the new information or new views which original thinking always produces. Not that Mr. Jarman's work requires such an apology; he has thought much, but carefully too; and his book is more free from error than many, the correctness of which can be their only praise.

To begin with page 1;—here we find in the second paragraph a general proposition which does not appear to us to be so comprehensively correct as we could wish. Mr. Jarman says:

"A will of fixed or immoveable property is generally governed by the lex loci rei sitæ; and hence the place where such a will happens to be made and the language in which it is written, are wholly unimportant, as affecting both its construction and the ceremonial of its execution; the locality of the devised property is alone to be considered. Thus, a will made in Holland, and written in Dutch, must, in order to operate on lands in England, contain expressions which, being translated into our language, would comprise and define the lands in question, and must be executed and attested in precisely the same manner as if the will were made in England."

Now we are all apt to magnify the importance of things with which we are continually conversant, and to an English or an American lawyer, it is no wonder that the laws of England and America should appear of far greater importance in every respect than the laws of any other country; it is not surprising that the laws he has first learnt and best known, should unintentionally be regarded as the rule, and that other and different laws should be looked upon merely as exceptions. Some such undue regard to the laws of his own country appears to have influenced Dr. Story, when, in his Treatise on the Conflict of Laws, after stating the various opinions of some foreign jurists on the subject in question, he says:

"It is hardly possible to conceive a stronger illustration of the difficulty of undertaking to build up systems of jurisprudence upon mere theory and private notions of general convenience. The common law has wisely adhered to the doctrine, that the title to real property can pass only in the manner, and by the forms, and to the extent allowed by the local law. It has thus cut off innumerable disputes, and given simplicity as well as uniformity to its operations." (Conflict of Laws, 2nd ed., pp. 645—647).

Our author appears to follow Dr. Story in his views, and to regard the laws of England and America as furnishing the general rule. To us, however, the chapter on the subject contained in the masterly work of our countryman Mr. Burge, (Burge's Commentaries, vol. 4, c. 12), appears to contain by far the most philosophical view of the matter. According to Mr. Burge, "In the jurisprudence of Spain, Holland, and France, and of the greater number of the States of Europe, if the testament be made with the forms prescribed by the law of the place where it was executed, it will be valid, and will effectually dispose of property situated in another country, where the law prescribes different forms." "By the jurisprudence of England and the United States, a will devising lands in England, or in the States, if the solemnities prescribed by the Statute of Frauds have not been observed, would be ineffectual to pass those lands. This doctrine is fully warranted by the qualification which has been given by jurists to the rule lex loci regit actum." (4 Burge, Comm. 585, 587). The rule therefore is regarded, and we think rightly, by Mr. Burge to be, that it is sufficient for the testator to conform to the ceremonies of execution required by the law of the place in which his will is made; and that which Mr. Jarman lays down for the rule is taken by Mr. Burge to be merely an exception or qualification appertaining to the local laws of England and America. To say that our laws are right, and all others are wrong, seems too hasty a way of removing a difficulty: while our own laws look upon a will of lands in the light of a conveyance, we should allow the lawyers of other countries to regard, if they please, the expression of the last wishes of a dying man with the same favour as they would a contract; so that they allow us, as they do, to deal more strictly when lands subject to our own law are brought in question.

In reading an author, whatever be his subject, it is always to be borne in mind that the subject he has in hand must necessarily occupy his chief attention, and that his remarks on other matters must be taken in connection with it; so that neither should the reader of a book on one subject hope to obtain from it correct and precise information on another; nor, if he reads with any such hopes, should he blame the writer for disappointing him. Thus, in a treatise on wills, one ought not to look for information on the subject of purchase-deeds; though it is still desirable, that, when any such information is given, it should be correct. Now there is a paragraph to be found in the 198th page of our author to which the above observations seem to be applicable. It is to the effect that the statute 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, (commonly called the Statute of Mortmain), is declared by some of its sections not to extend to purchases for a valuable consideration and a reference is made in the note to another statute, (9 Geo. 4, c. 85). It is curious enough that this latter statute contains a recital that the sections in the former statute relating to purchases for valuable consideration were "only intended to prevent such purchases from being avoided, by the reason of the death of the grantor within twelve calendar months after the sealing and delivery of the deed or deeds relating thereto;" but that it had notwithstanding been generally apprehended that the provision was intended wholly to exempt such purchases from the operation of the act, and in consequence thereof the formalities by the act prescribed in relation to the conveyance of hereditaments to charitable uses, had in divers instances been omitted on purchases for a full and valuable consideration; and by reason of such omission, the title to such hereditaments might be considered defective. The act then proceeds to remedy such defects up to the time of its passing, though it expressly provides (sect. 3) that the formalities prescribed by the act shall not be thereby dispensed with in relation to any deed made after its passing. If our author's readers should confine themselves to such a knowledge of the Mortmain Act as may be derived from his epitome, the remedial statute of Geo. 4 may soon require to be re-enacted.

A little further on in the book (p. 267) occur some observations which induce us to wish that our author himself had more vividly had in view the charitable rule of construction which we have just adduced for his benefit. The observations we refer to are made on the decision of Sir John Leach, V. C., in the case of Haly v. Bannister, (4 Madd. 276), "where," in the words of our author, "the testator had directed certain sums of stock in the public funds to be purchased by his executors, and the dividends accumulated, until one of the children of his daughter, born or to be born, should attain the age of twenty-one years, when the whole was to be transferred to such child and any other 'child or children who might be then living; the will contained a residuary clause. Sir J. Leach, V. C., said, the statute prevents an accumulation of interest during the minority of an unborn child; but as to the principal, the law remains as before the statute. The excess of accumulation prohibited by the statute would form part of the residue."

Of this decision Mr. Jarman asserts, that it reduces to insignificance, and renders wholly inoperative, the seemingly important clause in the statute, which authorizes accumulation during the minority of any person, who would, if of full age, be entitled, under the trusts, to the income. And further on he observes, that it seems to place in some peril the accumulating trusts ordinarily introduced into provisions for the maintenance during minority of persons unborn at the testator's decease, which direct the unapplied surplus income from time to time to be added to the principal.

Now, with great deference to Mr. Jarman, we really cannot see that there is anything at all in this decision, if the words of the Vice-Chancellor are taken, as we submit they ought to be, in connexion with the subject of them. The direction is to accumulate from the decease of the testator, the time when his codicil began to operate, until an unborn child should attain the age of twenty-one years; and to this the Vice-Chancellor replies, "The statute prevents an accumulation of interest during the minority of an unborn child." Of course it does under the circumstances of this case. If you accumulate before the child is born—for a period limited in law only by the mother's life—you cannot go on accumulating throughout the child's minority. "The excess of accumulation," says the Vice-Chancellor, "prohibited by the statute would form part of the residue." Viewed in this light, the decision is far removed from a serious attack, either upon an important clause in the statute, or on the ancient common form of accumulation introduced into the provision for maintenance. It is simply a decision that any life in being and a minority afterwards together form too long a term for accumulation, a proposition which we apprehend no one would dispute. We confess we have a sympathy for the common forms, and do not like to see any of them brought into discredit; whilst we should have no objection to see them shorn of a little of the proud luxuriance of their verbiage, any suspicion cast on their integrity immediately awakens our apprehension. The common form in question is clearly within the saving clause, which allows accumulation during the minority or respective minorities only of any person or persons who, under the trusts of the will, would for the time being, if of age, be entitled to the income directed to be accumulated. Even where the vesting of the corpus of a fund is suspended during minority, yet, under the common form, accumulation never begins till all the persons who would for the time being, if of age, be entitled, have come in esse; for, during the lives of the parents the income is, or ought to be, invariably disposed of. There being, therefore, no ground of objection to the form beyond a mere interpretation which may be given to a dictum, and that interpretation opposed, as well by the subject which occasioned the dictum as by the plain words of the statute, we shall still make use of our common form without any anxiety as to the result*.

* Since the above was in type, a case at the Rolls has been reported by Mr. Beavan, (Ellis v. Maxwell, 3 Beav. 587), containing a dictum by Lord Langdale, (p. 596), which certainly would, if it were to be relied on, place in great peril the common form. It is, that, taking the words of the statute as they are, they do not appear to permit accumulation during a minority, and any time to elapse between the death of the testator and the commencement of the minority, or in favour of any person who would not, for the time being, if of full age, be entitled to the annual produce of the fund. But, with great submission, the words of the statute, in the 1st section, the

There are a few disputed points touched upon in the work, of some of which notice has been already taken in other articles in the Jurist, and on all of which the opinions and reasons of our author are well worthy of attention.

This is eminently a book of principles. Our author is always looking for a rule; and his success is in proportion to his keenness and industry. Where others can find nothing but disorder, he will discover some deep-laid principle, by the aid of which he will set the cases smooth, down to the present time. His chapter on Conditions in Restraint of Marriage is a happy example of what may be done in thus reducing to order the most intractable materials. He has moreover escaped the common snare of estimating the importance of a principle by the number of cases that may happen to have been decided on it. Many most important principles of law are supported by very few decided cases; whilst on the other hand, many trumpery points have been decided and reported again and again. Here, we have the principles broadly stated, the authorities set down in a note, and any peculiar case separately discussed; and should any principle occur, supported by reason, though as yet not sanctioned by authority, still it finds, as it ought, admission to the text, whilst those numerous cases which in fact decide nothing, are very properly accommodated in a little note.

So much for the present volume. We have no doubt that the forthcoming twin will bear the same well-proportioned features as this its elder brother.

A Practical Treatise on the Law of Interpleader. By HENRY A. SIMON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. [Blenkarn, 1842.]

We have some hesitation in allowing to this work the name of a treatise, as it contains nothing more than notes of some equity cases on bills of interpleader, very like the marginal notes to the reports, and a similar collection of the decisions of the common-law courts upon the Interpleader Act, with extracts from the act itself. Little appears to have been done in the arrangement of the matter, and still less in attempting to deduce any settled rules of law, or to afford the reader any guide in judging of the weight or authority of the cases. Neither are the cases in some instances correctly stated. Thus, in p. 6, we find it laid down, that in equity a bill of interpleader "must shew that each of the defendants whom it seeks to compel to interplead, claims a right; and if it fails to do so, both the defendants may take the objection by demurrer; the one because the bill shews no claim of right in him; the other because the bill shewing no right in the co-defendant, discloses no ground for the interference of the court." And the reference for this position is to 1 Vez. 249. Now, without denying the correctness of the position, we must observe, that Malcalfe v. Hervey (the case in 1 Vez. 249), certainly did not decide any such point, and indeed could not well decide it. For the case was a bill filed against one defendant, alleging a rumour of issue by A., and suggesting that such issue was entitled to the estate in question; and praying that if there was any such person he might interplead with the defendant; and for an injunction against ejectment by the defendant. The defendant demurred generally, not on the ground mentioned by Mr. Simon, but first, on the ground that the section in question, taken as they are, say nothing about the person in whose favour accumulation may be made, as may easily be ascertained by reference to the act. (Stat. 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98). This dictum, so far, must therefore be an accidental error either of his Lordship or of his reporter. To correspond with the statute, the words "in favour of," should have been exchanged for "during the minority of."

affidavit was insufficient, and secondly, that there was no case for relief; and the demurrer was overruled on the ground that it was not a mere bill of interpleader, but a bill of discovery, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the discovery. Nor can we find in any part of the judgment any dictum supporting the position laid down by Mr. Simon. It is plain, that either an incorrect reference has been printed, or that the author has mistaken the effect of the case in Vesey. Indeed, he has again in the next page, drawn from the very same case, a further conclusion not warranted by it, citing it as a decision that such a bill could not be supported; whereas no decision on that point was given, the demurrer being overruled, as we have mentioned, on another. Again, in p. 7, he says, citing Lounde v. Cornford, (18 Ves. 299; and 2 Story on Eq. s. 811, 812, 821, that "a tenant liable to pay rent may file a bill of interpleader where there are several persons claiming title to it in priority of contract or of tenure;" but that, "if a mere stranger should set up a claim to the rent by title paramount, and not in privity of contract or tenure, or if he should set up a claim of a different nature, such as a claim to mesne profits in virtue of his title paramount, in such case no bill of interpleader would lie on behalf of the tenant; for the debt and duty is not in the same nature or character." And for this Clark v. Byne (13 Ves. 383) is cited. Now, on the first point, there is not in the case in 18 Ves. one word about any question between landlord and tenant; it was a case where an injunction in interpleader was allowed to stay an action brought by bankrupts, indirectly to contest the commission; and with regard to Clark v. Byne, the point decided in that case was, that there may be interpleader by a tenant against his landlord, where the claim arises by the act of the landlord himself. The case deciding that a tenant cannot make his landlord interplead with a mere stranger, is not Clark v. Byne, but Dungey v. Angove, (2 Ves. 304). These instances are sufficient to shew, that, in regard to the cases in equity at least, the author has not bestowed sufficient care upon their examination.

The part containing the decisions at law is not, so far as we have been able to examine the positions laid down, with the cases themselves, open to the charge of inaccuracy, but only to that which we have before mentioned, that it is constructed on the too prevailing notion of the present day, that to pick out of the books short notes of cases, and to string them together in a neatly printed octavo, is to make a text-book.

If we could agree with the author in the observation made in the preface upon the absence of any other work on the subject, we might perhaps not be so disposed to blame him for doing what is after all only following the example of many of his learned brethren, and yielding to the attraction of a supposed demand for little indexes on every subject. But though there may not be any separate work like the present on interpleader, yet we could name several books in constant use by both barristers and attorneys which contain all that is here offered. As Mr. Simon has not in a single instance departed from his plan of stating merely the decision of the court, we forbear to make any extracts, and must conclude with saying, that, subject to the preceding observations on the character of his work, the manner of its execution demands neither much praise nor much censure.

IMPORTANT AND SALUTARY IMPROVEMENTS have been introduced into the practice of Life Assurance by this Company. All the advantages peculiar to mutual life assurance, arising from a division amongst the assured of the whole of the mutual profits, and that security and freedom from responsibility which proprietary companies can alone afford, are combined by the constitution of this, the only guaranteed Mutual Society.

By a half-premium credit system, one-half of the premiums may be retained for the first seven years, and repaid at the convenience of the assured; and by the ascending scale a greatly diminished rate of premium is required for the first twelve years, combining the advantages of an assurance for the whole duration of life with the economy of a temporary policy.

LONDON, DECEMBER 10, 1842.

It has been suggested by a learned writer of great eminence*, that, under the Thellusson Act, and the decisions that have been made upon it, some doubt may be entertained of the validity of the ordinary trusts for partial accumulation, introduced into provisions for the maintenance, during minority, of persons unborn at the testator's decease. The portion of the Act on which these doubts are said to rest, is that which excepts from the prohibition to accumulate "the minority or minorities only of any person or persons, who, under the uses or trusts of the deed, surrender, will, or other assurances, directing such accumulations, would for the time being, if of full age, be entitled unto the rents, issues, and profits, or the interest, dividends, or annual produce so directed to be accumulated." In a case before Sir J. Leach, V. C., (Haley v. Bannister, 4 Mad. 275), the testator had directed a trust for accumulation, to commence from the death of A. and B. his wife, in favour of the children of B. born or to be born, "so as to accumulate until one of the said children should attain the age of twenty-one years," and then and then only the principal to be transferred; and on this his Honor said, that "the statute prevents an accumulation of interest during the minority of an unborn child; but as to the principal, the law remains as before the statute. The excess of accumulation prohibited by the statute will form part of the residue."

Mr. Jarman, in his excellent work on Wills, says, that this decision makes the portion of the Act to which we have referred amount only to a mere saving or reservation of the rule of law, which disposes by way of accumulation of the surplus income of minors, after providing for maintenance. "It limits (he says*) the term of accumulation authorized by the Act to twenty-one years from the testator's decease, or the minority of a person then in esse, which in fact is included in the former, since every person born in the lifetime of the testator must attain majority before the expiration of twenty-one years from his decease." "The decision, therefore, (he continues), seems to place in some peril the accumulating trusts ordinarily introduced into provisions for the maintenance during minority of persons unborn at the testator's decease, which direct the unapplied surplus income from time to time to be added to the principal."

It is to be observed, that in Haley v. Bannister, the point to which his Honor's opinion directs itself, did not call for a decision, as, under the circumstances that appeared, there was not, when the case was before the Court, any child of the testator's born after his decease. However, whatever may be the effect of the dictum of Sir John Leach, its authority has been recognised and acted upon by Lord Langdale in deciding a very late case, Ellis v. Maxwell, (3 Beav. 587). In that case, the trusts were for the benefit of a class of children whose parents were living at the testator's decease, to be paid and become vested as and when they should attain twenty-one, with a direction for maintenance, and for accumulation of the surplus, the accumulation to be payable and paid with the original shares. At the death of the testator, there were no such children, but after his death children were born; and the question was, whether the accumulation directed till the majority of such children, was void. Lord Langdale held that it was, partly on the language of the Statute, and partly it would seem on the authority of Haley v. Bannister, and an earlier case, Longdon v. Simpson, (12 Ves. 295).

With regard to the effect of the two cases, (Haley v. Bannister, and Ellis v. Maxwell), a recent writer* doubts, whether they go the length attributed to them by Mr. Jarman. (See Mr. Hargrave's Treatise, p. 131). He appears however to agree with Mr. Jarman as to the effect of Sir J. Leach's dictum on the ordinary trusts for partial accumulation referred to, when those trusts are framed, as is frequently done, so as to give only contingent interests to the children. But if they are framed in another very usual way, to give vested interests, subject to be divested, then he seems to consider that the dictum of the Vice-Chancellor has no application, and that such trusts are good.

In Mr. Hargrave's doubts as to the extent to which the cases of Haley v. Bannister and Ellis v. Maxwell cut down the operation of the Statute, we confess we participate; for in neither of those cases is there any thing, as it appears to us, to warrant the assumption, that the Court meant to lay down so general a rule as that attributed to Sir John Leach by Mr. Jarman. In the case before his Honor, the period when accumulation was to commence for the benefit of the party or parties ultimately entitled to its produce, was absolute; it was to commence at the death of the testator, and was not to terminate till the majority of one of the children of his daughter; and clearly, if, at the death of the testator, there had been no child of the daughter, but one had been born afterwards, the trust for accumulation till the majority of that child would have been void. For, under the trusts of the will, the accumulation would be going on for more than the minority of the person who, if of full age, would be entitled. And in Ellis v. Maxwell, this was the precise state of circumstances on which the Court had to adjudicate.

We apprehend therefore, that Sir John Leach's expression must be taken with reference to the state of circumstances he was contemplating, and is not to have attached to it a meaning much more extensive than those circumstances require. It may be inferred that his opinion was not intended to imply generally, that, with reference to minorities, there can be no accumulation except during the minority of a person in esse at the decease of the testator, but only that, with reference to the sort of case before him,—accumulation from the decease of a testator till the attainment of majority by an unborn child, would not be permitted by the Statute. That this is the light in which Lord Langdale viewed Sir J. Leach's opinion, and that his Lordship did not himself mean to carry the doctrine further, we may gather, not only from the circumstances in Ellis v. Maxwell being precisely such as to limit the meaning of the Court in the way we contend it is to be taken, but also from Lord Langdale's expressions in referring to Longdon v. Simpson. "Taking the words of the Statute (he says) as they stand, they do not appear to permit accumulation during the minority, and also a time to elapse between the death of the testator and the commencement of the minority, or in favour of any person who would not for the time being, if of full age, be entitled to the annual produce of the fund; and accordingly, in the case of Longdon v. Simpson, where an accumulation was intended to be made until unborn children attained twenty-one, Sir W. Grant decreed an accumulation for twenty-one years only." These observations of the Master of the Rolls seem to shew that his Lordship was considering exclusively a case where a trust is limited to commence at the death of the testator, and not to terminate until children who may come into esse afterwards shall have attained majority. We submit, therefore, to the learned reader, that these cases do not determine that there cannot be under the fourth division of the first clause of the statute any accumulation, except during the minority of persons in esse at the death of the testator.

Viewing these cases in this light, it is difficult to see how either of them can have any application to the trusts referred to by Mr. Jarman and Mr. Hargrave; because, in those trusts, in whichever way they are constructed, the accumulation is not originally and specifically limited to commence from the period of the death of the testator in favour of any person unborn at such period; at the death of the testator the accumulation begins for those children who are then in esse. The accumulation for an unborn child does not begin till such child comes into esse; for it is not of course till then that any share of the income becomes applicable to his use, or that any interest in the principal arises in him. It is true, that if all or any of the children in esse at the death of the testator die before being actually entitled to the dominion over their shares, the after-born child may take in fact an interest in capital formed partly of accumulations commencing before his birth; and therefore in a sense there is an accumulation for more than his minority: but the accumulation which arises on the share of the principal in which the unborn child acquires an interest in coming into esse, does not, and cannot, of course, begin till his birth, and does not therefore extend over more than his minority.

The trusts under discussion appear to us in fact to have relation to two branches of the clause of the Statute, viz. the third and fourth; they are trusts of the capital in certain shares destined or marked out, first, for the children in esse at the time of the testator's death; and as to them, it is clear, that, under the third branch of the clause, the accumulation of the whole or a part of the income for their minorities would be good; but the trusts at the same time comprise limitations over of some share or shares of the capital to those children who shall come in esse after the death of the testator; and on those children taking interests or possibilities in the principal, and not till then, the accumulation in respect to them is to begin, and that accumulation seems to fall within the fourth branch of the clause.

Expressing the same view in another form, the trusts under discussion seem to be in the alternative, either for accumulation during the minorities of persons in esse at the death of the testator; or, if the contingency of another child coming into esse shall determine those accumulations, then for the minorities of such persons as would be entitled if of full age.

It may perhaps be said, that, if we adopt this construction, we fall into the assertion of the doctrine, that a trust may be created to accumulate from the death of the testator until there shall be a child of a certain marriage, and then, from the birth of that child, upon trust to accumulate for him till his majority; in other words, that we assert the very doctrine repudiated by Haley v. Bannister and Ellis v. Maxwell. Undoubtedly, we must admit, that, if the trusts under discussion can be supported, there may be in effect an accumulation, which, by a combination of circumstances, may extend from the decease of a testator to the period of majority of a person not in esse at the death of the testator; but the mere circumstance, that the result of a combination is de facto an accumulation exceeding twenty-one years, is no necessary objection to the validity of the trusts created in part such accumulation. (See Lord Eldon's observations in 9 Ves. 136). The true point is, whether the particular accumulation directed by the trust itself commences at such a period, that it may extend over more than the minority of the person, who, if of full age at the time of its commencement, would be entitled to the income. And we contend, that, under the trusts in question, firstly, no accumulation is directed for the person born after the testator's decease, to commence until that person comes into esse; secondly, that such person on coming into esse is the person who would be entitled under the trusts to the income directed to be accumulated; and thirdly, therefore, that such trusts fall within the protection of the fourth branch of the clause of the statute.

With respect to the distinction taken by the author of the Treatise on the Thellusson Act, between the two modes of framing the trusts carrying maintenance and accumulation, we confess we doubt whether it can be supported. It is admitted by that learned writer, that if the trusts are framed on the principle of giving vested interests subject to be divested, the accumulation of the surplus income, whether for the infant or for other persons, is protected by the fourth branch of the clause. Now, whether there is any difference on technical grounds of reasoning or not, it is plain that in the effects of the two modes of framing the trusts there is none. In the case where they are so framed as to give vested interests, the effect of there being children born after the decease of the testator is, that de facto the capital out of the income of which accumulation is to take place for those children, is partly composed of accumulations antecedent to the birth of such children; and therefore there will be in that case as much accumulation exceeding the period of the minority of the unborn children, as in the case where the trusts are so framed as to give to all the children only contingent estates originally. If the Statute acts on these trusts at all, it does so on the principle of prohibiting de facto accumulations, which in any manner and by any combination, directly or indirectly, endure for more than the minority of the unborn children. Therefore, either the Statute has no application at all to the trusts under discussion, or else it applies to them, as suggested by Mr. Jarman, in whatever way they are constructed. The point is, however, it must be confessed, full of difficulty; and while we have on the one hand the practice of conveyancers unattacked by direct decision, and on the other the deliberately pronounced opinion of so eminent a writer as the author of the Treatise on Wills, and the circumstance that his opinion is supported at least by the apparent general intention of the Statute, it may be well to say, adopting the words of the learned author of the Treatise on the Thellusson Act, that the solution of all the difficulties surrounding the adoption of these clauses, as a measure for bona fide accumulations under the Statute, we confess to be beyond our power.

Correspondence.

ON THE ADMISSIBILITY OF CONFESSIONS MADE TO A CLERGYMAN IN CONSEQUENCE OF RELIGIOUS PERSUASION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE JURIST.

Sir—I am desirous of supplying your readers with two or three cases bearing on this subject from the Irish Reports, which were not noticed in THE JURIST of the 26th ult., and accompanying them with a few observations.

The first, Butler v. Moore, at the Rolls, 24th February, 1802, is directly in point, and is found reported from MS. in MacNally's Rules of Evidence on Pleas of the Crown, Vol. 1, p. 253. Lond. 1802. In that case the plaintiff filed a bill as heir-at-law, praying to be decreed to the estates of the late Lord Dunboyne, and alleging that the will under which the defendant claimed was a nullity, Lord Dunboyne having been a popish priest, and having conformed and relapsed to popery, which deprived him of power to make a will. Issue was joined; and the plaintiff produced the Rev. Mr. Gahan, a clergyman of the Church of Rome, to be examined, and interrogatories to the following effect were, amongst others, exhibited to him—"What religion did the late Lord Dunboyne profess from the year 1783 to the year 1792? What religion did he profess at the time of his death, and a short time before his death?" The witness answered to the first part, viz. "That Lord Dunboyne professed the Protestant religion during the time," &c., but demurred to the latter part, in this way—"That his knowledge of the matter inquired of (if any he had) arose from a confidential communication made to him in the exercise of his clerical functions, and which the principles of his religion forbid him to disclose, nor was he bound by the law of the land to answer."

Duquerry, Ponsonby, Plunket, J. Ball, and Bellew, supported the demurrer.—They argued, that the law, from principles of policy, allowed a confidence, which was not to be betrayed; and instanced the cases of barrister and client, attorney and client, husband and wife, magistrate and informer, grand juror, &c. These, they said, were analogous cases; and courts of justice would not restrain the exercise of religious duties by compelling a disclosure of what was confidentially communicated by a repentant sinner to the minister of God. The Roman Catholic religion was not only tolerated, but sanctioned by the Legislature; and it was unreasonable to say that contradictory duties were imposed: first, that a Roman Catholic clergyman should exercise his religion, and then be called upon to violate the tenets of that religion by betraying the confidence reposed in him.

Burston, Saurin, Curran, O'Grady, and J. Lloyd, contra.—The claim of exemption from giving evidence is scrutinized with a jealous eye; and the person relying upon it must establish his right by shewing a positive law or express authority. The cases alluded to establish nothing beyond the particular character stated in them; and there is no instance in the history of the law of such a claim as the present. It should therefore be suppressed as unprecedented, impolitic, and dangerous.

Sir Michael Smith, Bart., M. R., thought there was no difficulty in the case, though it had run into a great length of discussion, which he indulged, as being most likely to give satisfaction upon a question which seemed to involve something of a public feeling. But he was bound to overrule the demurrer. It was the undoubted legal constitutional right of every subject of the realm, who has a cause depending, to call upon a fellow-subject to testify what he may know of the matters in issue; and every man is bound to make the discovery, unless specially exempted and protected by law. It was candidly admitted, that no special exemption could be shewn in the present instance, and analogous cases and principles alone were relied upon; and there was no doubt, that analogous cases and principles were sufficient for judicial determination. But the principle must be clear as light, and the analogy irresistibly strong. That clearness of principle and strength of analogy did not appear in this case; and demurrers of this nature being held strictly, (Vaillant v. Dodermead, 2 Atk. 524), he was bound to overrule it.

The next case to be noticed (R. v. Gibney, Jebb, C. C. 15) is like that of R. v. Gilham, (1 Moody, C. C. 186), as correctly exhibited in your article. It was an indictment against the prisoner for the murder of his infant child, tried before Johnson, J., at the summer assizes at Cavan, 1822; and the case rested upon separate confessions made by the prisoner to two constables after he had been brought, on his way to gaol, to the place where the dead body lay, under extraordinary circumstances. The question there was, whether the confession did not result from the circumstance of the prisoner's mind being excited to terror by the acts and speeches of the persons through whom and by whom he was conducted to gaol; and therefore whether it was such a voluntary confession as ought to be given in evidence against the prisoner. The learned judge received the confession, reserving the question as to its admissibility for the opinion of the judges; who held that it was properly received, on the ground that there had been no threat or intimidation, nor any fear of a temporal nature produced; but that any terror which might have been excited, was as to what might happen in the next world.

It is certain that the ground of excluding a confession made to the attorney, is not the privilege of the attorney, but the consideration that a full and free communication between the attorney and his client is essential to the proper conduct and termination of judicial investigations. "Without such a communication, no person can safely come into a court, either to obtain redress or to defend himself." (See the Observations of Lord Brougham, C., in Bolton v. The Corporation of Liverpool, 1 My. & K. 88, 94, 95, and in Greenough v. Gaskell, Id. 98, 103).

It is equally certain, that the impropriety of violating private confidence reposed in a party, is not recognised as a sufficient bar to the disclosure of facts confidentially communicated. In R. v. The Duchess of Kingston, (11 St. Tr. 246; 20 How. St. Tr. 586), Lord Barrington declined to answer a question put to him on the part of the prosecution, saying, "If anything has been confided to my honour, or confidentially told me, I hold, that, as a man of honour, as a man regardful of the laws of society, I cannot reveal it;" upon which Lord Camden addressed the following observations to the House:—"The laws of the land are, to receive another answer from those who are called to depose at your bar, than to be told, that in point of honour and of conscience, they do not think that they acquit themselves like persons of that description, when they declare what they know. There is no power or torture in this kingdom to wrest evidence from a man's breast who withholds it: every witness may undoubtedly venture on the punishment that will ensue on his refusing to give testimony. As to casuistical points, how far he should conceal or suppress that which the justice of his country calls upon him to reveal, that I must leave to the witness's own conscience." (See also the Observations of Lord Kenyon and Buller, J., on this point, in Wilson v. Rastall, 4 T. R. 753, 758, 759). The rule on both points is the same in the law of Scotland. "However much the law respects the confidence and secrecy of friendship, it looks to a higher obligation and paramount duty,—that of giving information and disclosing the truth in a court of justice." (Burnett on the Criminal Law of Scotland, pp. 435—439. Edinb. 1811).

The Code Pénal of France, in its enactment against the disclosure of confidential and professional communications, excepts cases in which it takes place in due course of law. By Art. 378, "Les médecins, chirurgiens et autres officiers de santé, ainsi que les pharmaciens, les sages-femmes, et toutes autres personnes dépositaires, par état ou profession, des secrets qu'on leur confie, qui hors le cas où la loi les oblige à se porter dénonciateurs, auront révélé ces secrets, seront punis d'un emprisonnement" &c., "et d'une amende" &c. The inadmissibility therefore of a confession made to a clergyman in the discharge of his spiritual duties pro salute anime must be rested on the privilege of the clergyman. If such a privilege should, notwithstanding the first-cited case, be determined to exist, there seems good reason for limiting it to a confession after the commission of the crime; and therefore a disclosure, even in confession to a Roman Catholic priest, of an intended crime before the commission of it, would not, it is submitted, be privileged. In the case of R. v. Hayden, (Fox & Smith, 379), which was a trial at bar, on the 25th of January, 1825, for a libel on the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, Bushe, C. J., who delivered the judgment of the court, in adverting to the argument, that if the communication (which in that case was to an attorney) had been for the purpose of consulting how a crime of a treasonable and felonious nature might be committed with impunity, it could not be privileged, observed, that "If any man should confide to a professional adviser that he had a treasonable or felonious intention, and wished to know how he might execute it so as to escape punishment, it would be too much to say that such communication, which might make the man consulted guilty of misprision, was privileged." And in Burnett's Crim. Law, p. 437, we read, "An agent also might be compelled to swear to his client's having declared his purpose to commit the crime, or to his (the agent's) having undertaken a criminal employment by desire of his client, as in the case of forgery, by falsifying a deed, the copy of which was sent to him by his employer."

I will conclude this long communication by remarking that the military law, as regulated by statute, acknowledges the prerogative of the courts to require from its officers the discovery of matters, which, except in the character of witness, they are bound to keep secret. The oaths taken by members of courts martial and by the Judge Advocate, contain a clause not to "disclose or discover the vote or opinion of any particular member of the court martial, unless required to give evidence thereof as a witness by a court of justice or a court martial in a due course of law." LONDON, DECEMBER 17, 1842.

A FEW weeks since was published a pamphlet, intitled "Facts and Arguments in Favour of a more Frequent Delivery of Gaols, by Lord Western." Its appearance at that time seems to have been caused by a report which then prevailed, that a commission was about to be issued to deliver the gaols in the course of the present month. No such commission has however been issued; and if such an intention was ever entertained by the Government, it must have been, for the present at least, abandoned. We quite agree with the noble lord in thinking, that "a strong feeling in the public mind of the necessity of a more frequent delivery of our gaols, generally and regularly, is becoming very prevalent." The facts stated by him so strikingly illustrate this necessity, that we think we cannot in the present Number employ our pages better than, as far as is in our power, calling to them the attention of the public.

In 1819, Lord Western, then a member of the House of Commons, moved an address to the Prince Regent on this subject, and from the facts which he then collected from the returns made to the House, he has selected the following, which, after allowing for the difference that exists between the several counties of England, in the average amount of crime committed within each, may be taken as fairly representing the state of all. "At the Maidstone Spring Assizes, (we presume in 1819), there were 177 prisoners for trial, of these twenty-nine were in prison before the 1st of October, eighty-three before the 1st of January. Now, it is evident, that the shortest period of those confined before October was six months; and it is notorious, that six months is considered sufficient punishment for half the felonies that are committed. But the case is stronger yet, when we consider the case of those who were afterwards acquitted—seven of the twenty-nine above mentioned were acquitted; nine of the seventeen were discharged by proclamation, or from not having bills found against them, or not prosecuted. On the other hand, it appeared, that twenty-five convicted felons were sentenced to imprisonment, the longest period of whose confinement was six months, being the shortest period of confinement of those who were imprisoned before the 1st of October. It might be said, that some of the convicted felons were imprisoned some months before trial. It was common for the Court to address the prisoner, and tell him, that in consequence of the time he had lain in prison, his sentence would be for a short period, say for instance, one month only:—two men brought to the bar who had each been in prison six (five) months, the one convicted is told, that in consequence of five months' previous imprisonment, his sentence would only be for one month more; the other is acquitted, perhaps no bill found against him, and has endured five-sixths of the punishment of those who were found guilty. There were three at Maidstone, who, after being about seven months in prison, were discharged by proclamation, whilst various convicted felons suffered only six-sevenths of the punishment, including the imprisonment before trial, which was inflicted upon these three persons against whom no bill was found."

"By the returns of the Spring Assizes at Chelmsford, the cases were not less striking than those at Maidstone; the total number tried was 166; of these, twenty-five were in prison before the 1st of October, of whom eleven were acquitted, and of these eleven, six were discharged by proclamation, two were in prison eight months, three, seven months and fifteen days; whilst, on the other hand, sixteen convicted of felony were considered to be sufficiently punished by imprisonment under six months. Upon the whole, it appeared by the papers on the table, that 406 of those persons who were tried at the Spring Assizes had been in gaol before the 1st of October, whilst from the annual return it would be seen, that 800 persons convicted of felony suffered under their sentence a lighter punishment than the 405 experienced before trial."

These facts speak so strongly for themselves, as scarcely to require any comment. Since the period they refer to, the extensive alterations in the criminal law had, until recently, made many offences triable at the quarter sessions, which were then obliged to be sent to the Assizes, for although the Justices in sessions had, in point of law, jurisdiction over almost all offences inferior to treason, it was not the practice for them to try any indictments for capital felonies: and thus, when the offence ceased to be punishable capitally, the Justices assumed to themselves the trial of it. Now, however, as by the act of last session they are prohibited from trying any offence, which, when committed by a person not previously convicted of felony, is punishable by transportation for life, matters have been restored to nearly the same state as they were in 1819; or perhaps we might say, that, as several crimes not within this class are taken out of their jurisdiction, the number of prisoners who must be tried at the Assizes will now be greater than ever.

The more forcibly to illustrate the hardship which this delay of trial inflicts upon persons whom the law always presumes to be innocent, and who the above returns shew not unfrequently are so, we will take the case of a crime, which, although its punishment may be transportation for life, is in many instances visited with only a short term of imprisonment. A man causes the death of another under circumstances which amount in law to the crime of manslaughter. They may even be such as to leave no doubt in the mind of any person that his punishment will be of the lightest nature. But unfortunately for him, the Summer Assizes are just over, the Judge has just left the town, he is taken before a magistrate, witnesses are examined, who clearly prove the committing of the act—and what follows? If he be a rich man, the magistrate may admit him to bail, and his liberty at least he retains, but with a long period of anxious uncertainty before him. But if he be cursed with poverty, and with no friends but such as share it with him, he has no alternative but to go to prison, there to remain for eight long months, herding with felons of every description, and learning within the precincts of a gaol vices which to him were before unknown. Contrast this with another case. Just before the same Assizes, a man commits a felony, for which he is immediately tried, convicted, and sentenced to a few months' imprisonment. With respect to these two men the law has said, that the latter ought to be more severely punished; but practically it has inflicted the greater punishment upon the former. True it is, that the Judge in passing sentence may and generally does take into his consideration the imprisonment which the person has already undergone; a fact which greatly supports our argument.

Imprisonment before trial is of a different nature from that which follows it; and, properly, ought not to be at all regarded in the light of punishment. And where, after a long imprisonment, a man is acquitted, or no bill is found against him, not even this atonement can be made.

Extreme then, as it may be said, is the case we have put, others of greater injustice may be supposed. And all of them are proved by the returns to be of not unfrequent occurrence. By approximating the times of committing the crime, the injustice is not removed, only the degree of it is lessened. We know, indeed, that it cannot be entirely removed—for that we do not contend—what we wish is, that all that the law can do should be done; and, at least, that the months of April, May, and June, should not be made the best times in the year for committing serious crimes.

There are many we believe who, admitting the force of the foregoing argument, and without denying the necessity of a change in the present system, are averse to it, because they think the duties of the Judges are already so great as not to admit of being in any way increased. This assumes that the additional gaol delivery must be made by the Judges; and perhaps, as it would include the highest offences in the law, it would not be well to put in their place persons of an inferior rank. But we incline to think, that, at this period of the year, the business in London does not require the presence of more than two, or at the most three, of the Judges of each Court, and the remainder might hold a general gaol delivery throughout the country, with the assistance of Queen's Counsel and Serjeants, some of whom, no doubt, might be found with whose professional avocations the performance of such duties would not materially interfere. Or if the Judges cannot be spared, we would content ourselves with the latter personages, it being better, we think, that it should be done by them than left undone. But, in truth, the difficulty of carrying the plan into effect, ought not to prevail against its undoubted justice. In the administration of the other parts of the law, but little hesitation is displayed about the alteration of old or the establishment of new tribunals. There, a speedy decision is thought desirable, but not so, it would seem, in the Criminal Law, as if the anxiety of mind respecting the result of an action were greater than what is felt for the issue of a trial where life or liberty is at stake. We hope the Legislature will take the subject into consideration during the ensuing session; and the noble Lord, whose name we have mentioned, has our hearty thanks for his benevolent exertions.

A Practical Treatise on Nullities and Irregularities in Law, their Character, Distinction, and Consequence. By W. H. MACNAMARA, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Special Pleader. [S. Sweet, and Stevens & Norton, 1842.]

We cordially recommend this little book to the attention of our readers. There are few of them, we dare say, who do not sometimes find themselves anxiously inquiring what is an irregularity, whether it can be amended, or whether it has been waived. To these questions it affords them the means of obtaining a ready, if not always (when they are the irregular parties) a satisfactory answer. We have more than once expressed our opinion against the unnecessary multiplication of text-books, which is now so prevalent; but in the present instance we agree with the author, that the branch of practice he has chosen to treat of, besides being in constant request, presents materials so numerous and so important, as to be deserving of a separate treatise. In the first part of the book are deduced from the decided cases some general rules respecting nullities and irregularities, which the student will find particularly to deserve his attention. We quote the following as an instance:—

"An irregularity may be waived: a nullity never 'can be waived; that is, the objection to the former, but not to the latter, may be waived. In Holmes v. Russell, it was said by Coleridge, J.—'It is difficult 'sometimes to distinguish between an irregularity and 'a nullity; but I think the safest rule to determine 'what is an irregularity and what is a nullity, is to see 'whether the party can waive the objection. If he can 'waive it, it amounts to an irregularity; if he cannot, 'it is a nullity.' In that case it was sworn, that defendant, who was the accommodation acceptor of a 'bill of exchange, had never been served with process; 'and it appeared that plaintiff, on a wrongful affidavit 'of service, had entered an appearance for defendant, 'and signed judgment for want of a plea. It was held 'en that the proceedings were not void, for, 'Suppose 'the defendant,' continues the learned judge, 'had full 'notice that an appearance had been entered for him, 'and he had taken the declaration out of the office and 'pleaded, it could not be objected by him, that there 'was defective service. The objection might therefore 'be waived, and consequently it is a mere irregularity. 'Mesne process is only to bring a party before the court, 'and if by his own act he shews that he is before the 'court, such as by recognising the appearance entered 'for him, the omission of its service is remedied; but as 'judgment signed without any appearance is a nullity, it 'cannot be waived, whether by accepting and keeping the 'declaration (as in Roberts v. Spurr, 3 Dowl. P. C. 551) 'or otherwise. So, in Garratt v. Hooper, where a plea 'in abatement was a nullity, and plaintiff, after the plea 'had been delivered, amended his declaration and paid 'the costs of a judgment of nonpros signed against him, 'it was held no waiver; and by Taunton, J., 'There 'is a difference between an irregularity and a nullity; 'an irregularity may be waived, but a nullity cannot. 'Here there is one guide to the discovery of what constitutes a nullity in law. Can the objection be waived? 'Has it been decided that it can, though not on the distinction between null and irregular proceedings; or 'does it follow from legal principles, that certain acts 'should render the defect good or unobjectionable? If 'so, it is but an irregularity."

The above doctrine is however subject to some qualification, which the author proceeds to explain; but as it is too long for insertion in this place, we must refer our readers to the book itself for it.

In the second part are alphabetically arranged the "chief instances in which defects have been holden to be irregular, the mode and time of taking advantage of them, or of waiving them, and when they may be amended." Every instance of an irregularity is not professed to be given; but few cases can occur to which the practitioner will not here find something applicable, and with the advantage of being able at one view to embrace what in the books of practice must be searched for in various places. That irregularities will cease to exist, or be taken advantage of, cannot be hoped for, and perhaps the latter is not desirable; but Mr. Macnamara's book, by calling particular attention to the subject, will probably diminish their frequency.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—THIRD EDITION.

In 3 vols., royal 8vo., 4l. 14s. 6d. boards,

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of EVIDENCE and DIGEST of PROOFS in CIVIL and CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS. Third Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions. By THOS. STARKIE, Esq., of the Inner Temple, one of her Majesty's Counsel.

"There are now two general treatises on this extensive and intricate branch of Law, Mr. Starkie's and Mr. Philipps's, of which it is not too much to say, that they excel all the text books of the day in the combination of learning and research with clear method and scientific precision. Mr. Philipps's work, however, (that is to say, the last edition—which was published in 1838), labours under this disadvantage, that it is confined to an examination of the general principles of Evidence, and does not treat of the rules applicable to particular subjects and actions, otherwise than as they illustrate those general principles. Mr. Starkie on the other hand, reserving the first part of his work chiefly for the discussion of general principles, devotes two closely printed volumes to a Digest, alphabetically arranged, of the Rules of Evidence and the proof applicable to particular subjects and actions. It is in this that the great practical superiority and utility of Mr. Starkie's book consist."—The Jurist, No. 269.

MANAGING CLERK.—A Gentleman whose Articles expired about a month back, wishes to obtain a SITUATION, either as Conveyancing Clerk under the Principal in a Town or Country Office; or as general Managing Clerk under the Principal in a Country Office. As the advertiser's object is to obtain a Situation where he could gain general experience, a small salary only will be expected. Address T. F., Mr. Millard's, Bookseller, 70, Newgate-street, London.

LAW.—A Gentleman is disposed to enter into an arrangement with a Solicitor in London for the transfer to him of some matters of importance, and he addresses himself more particularly to those who have been lately admitted and desirous of quickly increasing their practice, and who might wish to avail themselves of the party's experience. A small capital, say 1200*l.*, will suffice; and as it will be applied by the party advancing it, its return secured, and freed from the consequences of partnership, it is an opportunity which seldom offers. As the advertiser's views will be made known in strict confidence, he can only reply to those letters wherein names are given. Address V. C. E., Office of the Jurist, 3, Chancery-lane.

IMPORTANT AND SALUTARY IMPROVEMENTS have been introduced into the practice of Life Assurance by this Company. All the advantages peculiar to mutual life assurance, arising from a division amongst the assured of the whole of the mutual profits, and that security and freedom from responsibility which proprietary companies can alone afford, are combined by the constitution of this, the only guaranteed Mutual Society.

By a half-premium credit system, one-half of the premiums may be retained for the first seven years, and repaid at the convenience of the assured; and by the ascending scale a greatly diminished rate of premium is required for the first twelve years, combining the advantages of an assurance for the whole duration of life with the economy of a temporary policy.

Specimen of Ascending Table.

Age.	First 3 Years.	Second 3 Years.	Third 3 Years.	Fourth 3 Years.	Remainder of Life.
20	£ s. d. 0 19 1	£ s. d. 1 5 6	£ s. d. 1 11 11	£ s. d. 1 18 4	£ s. d. 2 4 9

60	4 8 11	5 17 4	7 5 9	8 14 2	10 2 7

By the Deed of Constitution, all policies issued by this Company are declared to be INDEFEASIBLE and INDISPUTABLE, unless obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation, which renders them peculiarly valuable as documents of security.

COMMISSION.—The solicitor who transacts an assurance with this Company, is held to be the agent of the policy during its currency, and receives the usual commission upon all the future premiums, by whomsoever they may be paid.

Prospectuses, schedules, and every information requisite to enable parties to effect assurances, will be forwarded, free of expense, by the agents or manager.

ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, Manager.

LONDON, DECEMBER 24, 1842.

A QUESTION has lately been raised before his Honor the Vice-Chancellor of England, with regard to the effect of the Fines and Recoveries Act, upon the case where the husband of a woman, who would, if sole, be the protector of the settlement, has been convicted of felony*.

It will be recollected, that by the 24th section of that Act, it is enacted, that where a married woman would, if single, be the protector of a settlement in respect of a prior estate, which is not thereby settled or agreed or directed to be settled to her separate use, she and her husband together shall, in respect of such estate, be "protector of such settlement, and shall be deemed one owner."

By the 33rd section, it is enacted, that if any person, protector of a settlement, shall be convicted of treason or felony, or if any person not being the owner of a prior estate under a settlement, shall be protector of such settlement, and shall be an infant, or if it shall be uncertain whether such last-mentioned person be living or dead, then his Majesty's High Court of Chancery shall be the protector of such settlement, in lieu of the person who shall be an infant, or whose existence cannot be ascertained as aforesaid.

Lastly, it is provided by the 91st section, "that if a husband shall, in consequence of being a lunatic, idiot, or of unsound mind, and whether he shall have been found such by inquisition or not, or shall from any other cause be incapable of executing a deed, or of making a surrender of lands held by a copy of court roll, or if his residence shall not be known, or he shall be in prison, or shall be living apart from his wife, either by mutual consent or by sentence of divorce, or in consequence of his being transported beyond the seas, or from any other cause whatsoever, it shall be lawful for the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, by an order to be made in a summary way upon the application of the wife, and upon such evidence as to the said Court shall seem meet, to dispense with the concurrence of the husband in any case in which his concurrence is required by this Act or otherwise; and all acts, deeds, or surrenders, to be done, executed, or made by the wife in pursuance of such order, in regard to lands of any tenure, or in regard to money subject to be invested in the purchase of lands, shall be done, executed, or made by her in the same manner as if she were a feme sole, and when done, executed, or made by her, shall (but without prejudice to the rights of the husband as then existing, independently of this act) be as good and valid as they would have been if the husband had concurred: Provided always, that this clause shall not extend to the case of a married woman, where, under this Act, the Lord High Chancellor, Lord Keeper, or Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal, or other the person or persons intrusted with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found lunatic, idiot, and of unsound mind, or his Majesty's High Court of Chancery, shall be the protector of a settlement in lieu of her husband."

On petition to the Court to act as protector in the case referred to, his Honor was of opinion that the 33rd section of the Act had no application, and, consequently, that the Court of Chancery was not protector of the settlement; but he gave no opinion on the question whether, under the 91st section, the Court of Common Pleas has jurisdiction to dispense with the concurrence of the husband.

The ground of his Honor's opinion was, that the 24th section, constituting the husband and wife not several protectors, but "the protector," and treating them as one owner, the felony of the husband alone would not constitute that felony of "the protector" to which the 33rd section has reference; and that, to bring the case within that section, it would be necessary that both husband and wife should be convicted of the felony.

* Ex parte Slade, reported post, p. 1077.

In addition to this reason, there is another, to which we believe his Honor did not advert in his judgment, and which we should have thought tending to the same result, viz. that the 33rd section does not, in fact, make any provision for the case of the husband committing treason or felony.

It recites, it is true, that case among other cases of incapacity to act as protector, but it provides in terms only for the two other cases of incapacity, and is wholly silent as to any substitution of the Court of Chancery for a protector convicted of felony.

It may perhaps be said, that the recitals shew the intention of the Act to provide for the cases recited; and that if the words "in lieu of," and those following in the 33rd section, be struck out, the obvious intent of the Act would be preserved. But is not that, in fact, begging the question, and making an intention for an Act of Parliament, instead of collecting the intention from the language used? If we must suppose the Legislature guilty of an absurdity, why not as well attribute to it that of reciting a mischief and then forgetting to provide for it, as that of using an entire phrase of considerable length not intended to have any meaning? The words which require to be treated as surplusage to meet this particular case, may have been introduced expressly to prevent any doubt, whether, in the cases provided for, the former protector ceases to be such; and cases, at present unforeseen, may arise in which the presence of those words may be necessary to put a clear construction on the Act.

The opinion of the Vice-Chancellor having disposed, on the grounds above mentioned, of the question, whether the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction, three points remain for consideration: firstly, whether the effect of the felony and conviction of the husband is to take him altogether out of the operation of the 24th section of the Act, so as to leave the wife protector alone, as she would be if for all purposes sole; secondly, whether the effect of the conviction is to bring in, in any and what way, the rights of the Crown; and thirdly, if on these two points no material effect takes place, then whether the case falls within the 91st section of the Act.

On the first point it is to be observed, that, for some purposes, the conviction and transportation of the husband beyond seas would make the wife a feme sole; as, for instance, she might be sued alone. (See the cases referred to in Roper's Husband and Wife, Vol. 2, p. 120). And further it must be recollected, that, by the felony, the husband's interests in real estate become forfeited to the Crown. Now the 24th section, by connecting the appointment of the husband to be protector with the words "in respect of such estate," may be thought to intend that his appointment is in virtue of his interest in his wife's estate; and by the words "shall be deemed an owner," seem to connect such appointment with his ownership. It might therefore be argued, that, by the forfeiture of the husband of his interest in the estate in respect of which he is protector, the ownership necessary to support his quality of protector under the Act is destroyed, and that he ceases to constitute a necessary part of the protector, leaving his wife, as a quasi single woman, sole protector. But on the other hand, we must note that the husband's felony does not touch the validity of the marriage, and that the direct words of the Act make the husband and wife protector simply as husband and wife, without any direct reference to any other qualification being necessary in the husband, except his title as husband. Undoubtedly the most natural construction of the clause is, that the husband and wife remain protector, notwithstanding the felony of the husband.

Secondly, as to the effect of the conviction of the husband in modifying the rights of the wife by the intervention of the title of the Crown. The husband of a woman tenant for life has a freehold interest in right of his wife, and is entitled to the pernanity of the rents and profits during the joint lives. By his conviction for felony, his interest is affected with forfeiture; yet the Crown does not take the freehold, but only the pernanity of the profits during the joint lives; the freehold remaining in the wife.

The effect of the forfeiture to the Crown will not, therefore, we apprehend, be to take away from the wife the right of protectorship, which is incident to her being the owner of the estate for life; or transfer to the Crown any other interest, in right of the husband, than the pernanity of the profits. And consequently, if we are right in both these points, the only remaining question is as to the effect of the 91st section in giving jurisdiction to the Court of Common Pleas.

At first sight it would undoubtedly seem as if the case fell clearly within that section, which provides that the Court of Common Pleas may dispense with the concurrence of the husband, excepting only (in regard to the point under discussion) where the Court of Chancery shall be the protector of the settlement in lieu of the husband. But if we take notice that the Court is only empowered in the enacting part to dispense with the concurrence of the husband "in any case in which his concurrence is required by this Act or otherwise;" the question to be determined before the Court of Common Pleas can make an order is, whether the concurrence of the husband is required by the Act or otherwise; that is, whether it is by law necessary. This in fact brings before the Court of Common Pleas all and the very same questions which may come before the Court of Chancery in calling upon it to act as protector. And then one question will be, whether the Court of Common Pleas is bound by the decision of the Court of Chancery. That the Court of Common Pleas would give to the opinion of the Judge in Equity great weight, as an expression of opinion, is not to be doubted; but it is very much to be doubted whether a determination so guarded as that of his Honor the Vice-Chancellor on a question of jurisdiction, could be received as an authority by a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. Indeed, we apprehend that the question of jurisdiction must be determined by each Court, in reference to its own jurisdiction, on its own authority alone; and that a decision by the Court of Chancery that it has no jurisdiction under one clause of the Act, cannot be an authority for the Court of Common Pleas to determine that that Court has jurisdiction under another clause. If, however, the Court of Common Pleas should come to the same determination as his Honor the Vice-Chancellor, respecting the effect of the 33rd section, viz. that it does not make the Court of Chancery protector, and if it should also determine, as we conceive it would, first, that, under the 24th clause, the felony of the husband does not remove him from being a constituent part of the protectorship; and secondly, that the forfeiture to the Crown does not affect her right of protectorship, nor transfer to the Crown any rights of the husband except the pernanity of the profits; it would follow, first, that the concluding proviso of the 91st section may on this point be thrown out of consideration; secondly, that the husband being still protector, his concurrence is required by the Act; and thirdly, that as his case falls clearly within some of the grounds of incapacity pointed out by the 91st section, the Court of Common Pleas would have jurisdiction under the 91st section of the Act to dispense with his concurrence.

ON THE JURISDICTION OF COURTS OF LAW UNDER THE INTERPLEADER ACT.

It is still we believe considered doubtful, whether the Courts of Law have power to grant a rule under the Interpleader Act, where the adverse claim is of an equitable nature. The point has thrice come before them without being satisfactorily settled. On the first occasion, (Sturges v. Claude, 1 Dowl. 505), upon cause being shewn before Mr. Justice Patteson in the Bail Court to an interpleader rule, which had been obtained on behalf of a sheriff, on the ground, that the goods seized had been claimed by parties who had an equitable interest in them, and had commenced a suit in Chancery against the defendant, the learned Judge said, he thought the Act did not apply to such a case. It would seem, however, that he was somewhat influenced by the fact of the Chancery suit having been commenced, which made him view the case as if the parties had already chosen their remedy in equity. It is surprising, too, that the course which is admitted to be the proper one to pursue, if the interpleader rule cannot be granted, viz. to enlarge the time for the return of the writ, was not adopted in this case. The report says, the rule was discharged upon terms agreed to by the parties, which may, perhaps, have had the same effect. Next came the case of Putney v. Tring, (5 Mea. & W. 425), which was also an application by the sheriff. There, no decision was given, the rule, as the report says, being enlarged to enable the parties to come to some arrangement; but Alderson, B., said—"I entertain great doubts whether the principle laid down in Sturges v. Claude be a correct one;" and he argues, that, as the act speaks of a party "having no means of relieving himself from certain adverse claims but by a suit in equity, usually called a bill of interpleader," the remedy given by it should extend to all cases where such a bill might be filed. This argument we will notice after we have stated the third case. In Roach v. Wright, (8 Mee. & W. 155), also a sheriff's case, Parke, B., in refusing the rule, appears to approve of the decision in Sturges v. Claude, and says, "that if the execution creditor refuses to indemnify the sheriff, the proper course is to apply to the court, not under the Interpleader Act, but to enlarge the time for making a return to the writ." And Alderson, B., says—"Our jurisdiction is confined to the cases of claims actually made; but what has taken place here is not the making of a legal claim, but only the statement of an equitable interest." Unless the learned Judge intended to draw a distinction between the statement of an equitable interest and the making of an equitable claim, for which distinction there seems no foundation, the opinion here expressed is at variance with his former one, which it is remarkable was not cited or referred to. Having mentioned this case, we will now return to Putney v. Tring; and we may observe, that the words quoted by the learned Judge in that case are contained in the preamble of the first section, which relates to persons in the situation of stakeholders. The first five sections relate to them, and the sixth to sheriffs, and this has a separate preamble, differing in what seems to us a material manner from the preamble of the first section. The latter, the reader will observe, speaks of adverse claims which a party can only relieve himself from by a bill in equity, and would therefore include equitable as well as legal claims. But the preamble of the sixth section speaks of claims whereby sheriffs and other officers are exposed to the hazard and expense of actions. If, therefore, we take this word in its ordinary sense, those claims only are within this section which may be the subject of actions at law. Perhaps then the true construction is, that, in cases under the first section, there may be an interpleader where the adverse claim is equitable, but, under the sixth, the claim must be of such a nature as may be the subject of an action. And it is important also to notice, that the enlarging the time for making a return to the writ, which Baron Parke points out as the proper course where there is an equitable claim, cannot be adopted in cases within the first section, nor is there any proceeding analogous to it, unless that of giving the defendant further time to plead. The practice of enlarging the time is, however, of little importance. It existed long before the Interpleader Act was passed, and was found insufficient for the relief and protection of the sheriff. The conclusion we would venture to arrive at is, that the courts will not take notice of equitable claims against the sheriff, but that it is otherwise with claims against stakeholders. Nor does this seem to involve them in any difficulty from having to deal with equitable doctrines. Such doctrines are recognised by them in other instances; and an issue under the Interpleader Act might readily be drawn in such a way as to try an equitable right.

A Treatise on the Law of Copyright in Literature, the Drama, Music, Engraving, and Sculpture, &c. By PETER BURKE, Esq., Barrister at Law.

This is another of those attempts of which we have lately had so frequent cause to complain, to comprise an extensive subject in a very small compass, not marked even by the shadow of an appearance of the labour and thought without which so difficult an undertaking is wholly impracticable. When we inform the reader at all cognisant of the extent of the subject embraced by the Law of Copyright, and of the great number of decisions both at law and in equity that are to be considered in reference to it, that the author of the Treatise now before us has purported to include the whole subject of copyright, in literature, in music, in the drama, in sculpture, and in engraving, in fifty small octavo pages, we shall probably have said enough to shew that he cannot by any possibility have done more than glance at the heads of his subject. And more he has not done*.

Mr. Burke's production is not, it is true, except in some few particulars, which we will point out, inaccurate; but it is the very incarnation of meagreness: so much so, that we should be sorely pressed to say to what class of readers it is likely to be useful. That we may not be thought harsh in our criticism, we will refer to a few passages, and then leave it to the learned reader to judge. Let us take the subject of copyright in letters. On this there has been much contradictory decision and difficulty; yet it is thus summarily dismissed by Mr. Burke:

"The law," he says, in p. 13, "in letters, is this: If the letters be originally intended for the press, the form of epistolary writing being merely given to the work, whilst in reality it is a literary composition, such letters will of course come within the law which protects every other kind of literary production. As to letters which have passed from one person to another, but which, from their subject, or the character of the author, assume the nature of a literary composition, their transmission by the writer to the person to whom they are addressed, does not give the receiver any right to publish them; but with regard to common letters, such as are written on business, and on every other subject that may occur in the intercourse of private life, they cannot be considered as literary compositions, and are not entitled to protection on the ground of copyright, although courts of equity may sometimes interpose to stop their publication, when such publication is a breach of contract or confidence; or when they are intended to be made a source of profit at the risk of wounding private feelings. (Pope v. Curl, 2 Atk. 342; Thompson v. Stanhope, Amb. 737; — v. Eaton, 2 Ves. & B. 27; Earl of Granard v. Dunkin, 1 B. & B. 207; Godson on Patents, last ed. 327.)

* We do not of course mean to say that length is the measure of the merit of a book. A long book may undoubtedly be a bad book, and a short one may be a very good one; but there is a limit to condensation of matter, and there is a point at which brevity is only attained by omission. To discuss the law of copyright in the form of a text-book in fifty pages, so as to be practically useful, is wholly impossible. To complete such a task would pass the genius for condensation of a Bacon or a Machiavelli.

Again, as to what is literary piracy he says, p. 26, "Literary piracy is the unauthorized publication of a book so transcribed from another, in which copyright subsists, as to preclude the necessity of reading the original work."

"It should be here observed, that, to constitute literary piracy, it is not necessary the copy be likely to supersede the sale of the original work; for where even the copy is attainable only at a greater price than the original, still a piracy may exist. This was decided in the case of Roworth v. Wilkes, (1 Camp. 94). There, the defendant's counsel contended, that, though the article in the defendant's book (an Encyclopædia) contained all that was material in the plaintiff's production, still its connexion with a work of such magnitude and expense as the Encyclopædia, precluded the possibility of injury arising to the plaintiff by the preference which the public might give to the large publication. But Lord Ellenborough said, 'The test by which we must decide whether or not a party has infringed on the copyright of another is, not by inquiring what was the intention of the trespassing party, but whether the work of the party complaining has been so copied, that the copy may by any possibility supersede the original work. . . . It is true that a large work like the defendant's may be allowed to embrace all the information contained in the newest works on the subject, but they must set limits to their extracts, and not publish the work of another merely in a different form. It has been argued, that the defendant has used no greater liberty with the plaintiff's production than is assumed by reviewers; but the same rule holds in works of that kind; they fairly make extracts, and may comment on those portions; but it would be unfair if they should extract the substance of the work that they choose to review.' See also Sweet and Others v. Shaw, 3 Jur. 217; Bramwell v. Halcomb, (3 My. & C. 737)." This is all that is said on literary piracy generally; and about two pages more dispatch the whole subject of piracy.

As to the remedies against literary piracy, the remedy by injunction in equity is disposed of by Mr. Burke in about a page and a half, citing four cases! and the remedy by action in a page and a quarter, citing one case. (See pp. 29 to 32). And such flying notes are to be put forth to the world as a Treatise on the Law of Copyright! We submit to the learned reader, that the passages we have selected fully establish our assertion that Mr. Burke has treated his subject with such intense meagreness as to render his work practically useless. To what counsel, to what attorney, to what student even, is it of much value to be told the very little that Mr. Burke condescends to tell him on any of the subjects that we have mentioned, not being even supplied with a full list of the cases?

We have said also, that our author is in some instances inaccurate; and we now proceed to prove also this statement. In the passage on copyright in letters, it will have been observed, that he asserts the interposition of equity to prevent the publication of letters, "where they are intended to be made a source of profit at the risk of wounding private feelings." Now, in Gee v.

Pritchard, (2 Swans. 402), the point was much discussed; and in that case Lord Eldon expressly repudiated the notion, that the court would interfere on the ground of the publication of letters being painful to the feelings of the writer.

In p. 21, Mr. Burke refers to Sweet v. Cater, (5 Jur. 68), under the head of "assignment of an edition;" and appears to consider the case as deciding what is an assignment of an edition. Now, that was not the material point discussed in it. The point was, what was a sufficient interest in a party in the copyright to enable him to sustain a bill in equity to restrain infringement, and the court particularly avoided deciding that there was any assignment. Again, in p. 28, we find this:—"Piracy of a title. The remarks of Lord Eldon in the case of Hogg v. Kirby, (8 Ves. 215), would seem to shew, that there may be copyright in a title, as where a periodical work represents itself to the public to be the same as one already in the course of publication, the former is an infringement on the property of the latter." Now, the case of Hogg v. Kirby proceeded, not on any doctrine of there being a copyright in the title of a work, but on the ground that, to put forth a work with such a title, and such other contrivances, as to hold it forth to the public as the work of another, is a fraud; and on the ground of fraud, and not on the ground of title, such an imitation is restrained.

It is always with regret that we find ourselves called upon to condemn the productions of any of our professional brethren; and we are perhaps too prone to lenity in our criticisms whenever we find that a reasonable amount of intellectual labour has been brought to the task. But if learned writers will put forth, under the sounding title of Treatises on the Law, collections of mere scraps of information, the formation of which can hardly have cost them the labour that would be bestowed in answering a case, they can scarcely deem it a harsh measure, that they should be denied the merit of usefulness, when they have not laboured to become useful. It is just however to add, that some of Mr. Burke's statements of the Law are very neat and well put; that, except on the points to which we have referred, we find nothing calculated to mislead; and that the third chapter contains a convenient analysis of the Copyright in Designs Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100.

LONDON, DECEMBER 31, 1842.

WE have much satisfaction in perceiving that views similar to those that we have on different occasions put forth in the pages of this Journal, on subjects of Law Reform, are now adopted and urged upon the profession and the public by a learned writer, whose position as the author of some well-known professional publications, and as a member of a former Legislature, may communicate to his advocacy greater weight and efficacy than we might hope to attain*. The subjects to which we allude more particularly, are the irrationality of the present mode of remunerating the labours of lawyers, whether counsel or attorneys, by reference simply to the length of their productions; and the want of some scheme for applying the jurisdiction of Equity to matters in which the amount of the property in question is very small.

On the first of these subjects the remarks of Mr. Stewart entirely support the views which we took in a former number of THE JURIST, (Vol. 4, p. 161), shewing that the present system of regulating the amount of fees by the length of drafts or other papers, tends to produce great delay and waste of money to the suitor, and great loss of valuable time of the profession. Mr. Stewart, however, stops short, as we then did, at pointing out the defect, and does not propose any remedy except a taxation of costs relating to business not incident to judicial proceedings, as well as to the costs of business arising out of litigation. This is to be regretted, as the difficulty of suggesting an improved mode of remunerating professional labour, undoubtedly, far exceeds that of pointing out the defective tendency of the present mode.

There are several modes of remuneration for professional labour which appear more rational in theory than that at present adopted. But there are none of them, we fear, without some practical defects, the force of which it is not easy to calculate a priori. One of these modes is that adopted in reference to the professional occupations of scientific men, and also frequently adopted in reference to the employment of lawyers on public business, viz. a remuneration upon some fixed scale proportionate to the time employed, as, for instance, a given number of guineas per day. This plan has certainly the merit of regulating the remuneration of professional labour in some degree by the expenditure of professional skill and mind, and has therefore some tendency to repel verbosity, and to contract the amount of work done within the limits of necessity. But then it has, even in theory, the defect of not taking into account the greater or less difficulty of the particular labour; and therefore it is still open to the objection, that the exertion of greater mental energy and greater rapidity of production, only curtails the profits of the professional man.

Such as it is, this plan however obtains extensively in some professional pursuits. Civil engineers, for instance, and men of science when called upon to give evidence in a Court of Law or before a Parliamentary Committee, are usually thus remunerated; and in reference to those professional occupations the system is found, we believe, to work well. But in applying it to the remuneration of the lawyer, some serious practical difficulties would occur. For instance, suppose a solicitor instructed to prepare certain deeds: While engaged in that occupation, he may be called upon to attend to a variety of others, to see clients, to attend a trial, to examine documents in other matters, to answer without delay the queries of counsel in some pressing business; in fine, he is certain, if in full practice, not to be allowed to attend to one subject for any considerable unbroken period of time. How then is he to ascertain with any chance of accuracy, what portion of time he has devoted on the whole to each of his separate occupations? And what infinite trouble would be occasioned by the precautions necessary for keeping separate the accounts of business done for his various clients! Or, suppose counsel to be engaged in several causes to be heard about the same time: How would it be possible, consistently with any degree of personal convenience or comfort, for himself or his clerk to be able to say what specific portion of his time each particular brief has engaged? This mode of remuneration may be suited to pursuits in which some subject of considerable extent occupies the time of the professional man for one or more days continuously, but is obviously unsuited for occupations, liable, as those of the lawyer are, in either branch of the profession, to incessant interruptions.

The mode of remuneration adopted towards the physician, is but a form of that of remunerating by reference to time, and would be manifestly wholly inapplicable to the professional business of the lawyer.

The mode most consistent in theory with sound reasoning, would be that of variable fees, proportioned neither to length of documents, nor to mere extent of time occupied, but to the difficulty of the task and the perfection of its performance. But this difficulty then arises in practice,—who is to judge of these qualities? As between the solicitor and his client, it is clear that the client is absolutely incompetent to exercise any such judgment, from total ignorance of the subject; as between counsel and their clients, the client is again not the fitting judge of the difficulty of the task committed to the care of counsel, not because of his ignorance, (for every solicitor properly informed in his profession would be competent to appreciate the difficulties on which he takes the advice of counsel), but because the very fact of its being necessary to commit the transaction of business to counsel, makes it in most cases not only unnecessary, but improper, that the solicitor should put his client to the additional expense of his investigating the same matter. The proposition would remain, that, in either branch of the profession, the party transacting the business should himself be the judge of the difficulty and value of his labours, and determine the amount of the fee accordingly. How far the suitor would acquiesce in such a system—how far he would be disposed to rely in perfect confidence on the integrity of the profession—how far it would contain the vicious principle of making the emolument of the professional man depend on the extent of his self-conceit, rather than the actual strength of his ability, are questions which would require much consideration, before it could be at all safe to entertain the idea of applying it in practice. For ourselves we continue to think as we did, that remuneration by length is founded on very unsound principles; but we are at the same time fully persuaded, that, to find a practically available substitute, is a matter of very great difficulty. Probably, if men of competent ability would consider the subject in earnest, some combination of the mode adopted in the legal profession, with portions of those obtaining in other professions, might be arrived at, which would be found to work successfully.

Our limits will not permit us at present to touch upon the other subjects of Law Reform which Mr. Stewart discusses*. Some of them, it will be seen by the subjoined note, are of great importance, and may call for further observation in a subsequent number of THE JURIST.

SUBMISSIONS TO ARBITRATION.

There is nothing that exhibits in a stronger light the excellence of the forms in common use amongst conveyancers, than the ease and pliability with which they have been capable of being adapted from time to time to the gradual modifications that have taken place in the laws on which they are founded. The addition or the omission of a few words, sometimes even of a single word, has been sufficient for the purpose of embodying the most important alterations introduced by legislative enactment, or by the decisions of the courts. Notwithstanding the great revolution, it may almost be called, that the last ten or twelve years have witnessed in the law of real property, the consequent change in legal forms has not been at all proportionate in extent to the alterations of the law itself. The removal of ancient modes of procedure and conveyance has been considerable; but, to provide a substitute for them, the Legislature has had recourse to forms already in use, which have been accommodated to the altered law by the enlargement of their operation, and with the addition of certain prescribed solemnities. In the statute for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries especially, this prudent and moderate course has been pursued with remarkable success; and it has been followed, in the practical application of the enactments of that statute, by conveyancers, who have shewn a corresponding disposition to adapt their established precedents to the substituted mode of assurance with the least alteration that might be of their language and structure, and generally without the introduction, where it could possibly be avoided, of any novelty either in substance or expression. Even in those few cases, such as that of the protectorship of the settlement, where the legislative machinery is altogether new, the new apparatus of forms that has become necessary, has been carefully fashioned on some ancient model of an analogous kind. The same wholesome adherence to established precedents on the part of the draftsman, the same capacity of adaptation in the forms which he uses, the same gradual incorporation of the results of judicial determinations and of changes in the statute law, may be observed not only in such instruments as we have mentioned, which are framed with some circumspection and deliberation, but also in those of a more trivial and transitory description, in preparing which there is hardly time to weigh the value of the language that runs from the pen, but in which nevertheless the sentence, the clause, the half-dozen words, on which consequences of the utmost practical utility depend, concentrate the legal inferences laboriously collected from a multitude of cases and authorities, and arrived at only after a long process of litigation and discussion. Of this, there is hardly a more striking example to be found, than in the forms of the instruments employed for giving effect to agreements for referring matters in dispute to the decision of arbitrators. If we compare the old and the modern forms used for this purpose, it will be perceived that their difference consists in the introduction or the alteration of a very small number of words. On the practical convenience of these alterations, it is unnecessary to enlarge. Of the legal rationale which has led to them, and which authorizes their adoption and regulates their application, it may be useful to offer a few observations.

For though in matters of this kind, according to the highest authority, "Via trita est tutissima," yet while we follow the beaten track, our ease and security in pursuing it will be much increased by an accurate knowledge of our bearings, and a scientific acquaintance with the geography of our route.

1. Making the Submission a Rule of Court.

In agreements and bonds of reference it should always be provided, that either party shall be enabled to make the submission a rule of court. Without an express stipulation to that effect, the parties cannot have the power of making the submission a rule of court. But if this power is given them by the terms of the submission, and it is accordingly made a rule of court, non-performance of the award is a contempt, and obedience may be enforced by attachment; or if the award be, that either party do pay to the other a certain sum of money, the payment may be enforced by rule of court and execution thereon under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18. It has indeed been held, that money ordered to be paid by an award, under an agreement of reference that has been made a rule of court, is not money payable by the original rule of submission, and therefore execution cannot issue on that rule as on a judgment under the statute referred to, that enactment applying only where the money payable is expressed by the rule itself. There is however no difficulty in giving effect to the act as to such awards, if a proper case is made out. According to the course pointed out by Lord Denman in Jones v. Williams, (4 Per. & Dav. 217; 11 Adol. & Ell. 175), and sanctioned by the Court of Exchequer in the same case, (8 Mee. & W. 349; and see Richards v. Patterson, 8 Mee. & W. 313; Doe d. Thompson v. Amey, 5 Jur. 898), this may be done by calling on the delinquent party to shew cause why he should not pay a certain sum of money pursuant to the award; if that rule be made absolute, an execution may issue for the sum distinctly specified in the rule so obtained.

Unless the submission be made a rule of court, proceedings cannot be taken by application to the court to set aside the award, on account of the improper or defective decision of the arbitrator.

There are also additional reasons of great importance for the insertion of a clause providing that the submission shall be made a rule of court, derived from the provisions of the Law Amendment Act, (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), which effect so great an improvement in this branch of the law, and have so materially modified the form and manner of conducting an arbitration, that it is necessary to have the words of the enactments present to our minds.

By the 39th section of that act, "the power and authority of any arbitrator or umpire appointed by or in pursuance of any rule of court or judge's order, or order of Nisi Prius in any action now brought or which shall hereafter be brought, or by or in pursuance of any submission to reference containing an agreement that such submission shall be made a rule of any of his Majesty's Courts of Record, shall not be revocable by any party to such reference without the leave of the court by which such rule or order shall be made, or which shall be mentioned in such submission, or by leave of a judge; and the arbitrator or umpire shall and may, and is hereby required to proceed with the reference notwithstanding any such revocation, and to make such award, although the person making such revocation shall not afterwards attend the reference; and that the court, or any judge thereof, may from time to time enlarge the term for any such arbitrator making his award."

And by the 40th section, "When any reference shall have been made by any such rule or order as aforesaid, or by any submission containing such agreement as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the court by which such rule or order shall be made, or which shall be mentioned in such agreement, or for any judge, by rule or order to be made for that purpose, to command the attendance and examination of any person to be named, or the production of any documents to be mentioned in such rule or order; and the disobedience to any such rule or order shall be deemed a contempt of court, if, in addition to the service of such rule or order, an appointment of the time and place of attendance in obedience thereto, signed by one at least of the arbitrators, or by the umpire, before whom the attendance is required, shall also be served either together with or after the service of such rule or order."

And by the 41st section, "When in any rule or order of reference, or in any submission to arbitration containing an agreement that the submission shall be made a rule of court, it shall be ordered or agreed that the witnesses upon such reference shall be examined upon oath, it shall be lawful for the arbitrator or umpire, or any one arbitrator, and he or they are hereby authorized and required, to administer an oath to such witnesses, or take their affirmation in cases where affirmation is allowed by law instead of oath;" any person wilfully giving false evidence to be subject to the penalties of perjury.

If therefore the deed of submission contain a clause of agreement that the submission shall be made a rule of court, the reference will not be revocable by either party without the leave of the court or of a judge. And it is only when there is such a clause in the deed that the court is empowered, under the 39th section of the act, to enlarge the time for making the award; or under the 40th section, to compel the attendance of witnesses; or that the arbitrator is authorized by the 41st section, to swear the witnesses himself. And it is to be observed, that, in order to give him authority to do this, the deed should moreover contain an agreement, that the witnesses shall be examined upon oath.

According to the proper and general practice, the agreement should be, that the submission, and not the award, is to be made a rule of court. This is agreeable to the express words of the statute of Will. 3, by which power is given to the litigant parties "to agree that their submission of their suit" to arbitration shall be made a rule of court. However, it has been held, that the award may be made a rule of court if the submission so provides. (In re Storey, 7 Adol. & Ell. 602; 2 Nev. & P. 667).

The submission should specify the court of which it is agreed to be made a rule. Under the stat. of Will. 3, it may be made a rule of the Court of Chancery. But the provisions of the 39th, 40th, and 41st sections of the Law Amendment Act do not, it seems, apply to the Court of Chancery.

In Hall v. Ellis, the matters in difference between the parties in a suit for taking the accounts of a partnership, having by an order of the court been referred to arbitration, an application was made to the Vice-Chancellor, under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, for an order for witnesses to attend the arbitrator. Upon this occasion his Honor observed: "There is but one section in the act in which express mention is made of courts of equity, that is the 42nd; and with the exception of the 39th, 40th, and 41st sections, which may be called the debateable sections, there is not one which, on the face of it, is not solely and exclusively applicable to courts of law. The whole of the preamble too has reference to courts of law only; and it is remarkable that, in the 42nd section, where the object was to include courts of equity, there is no ambiguity whatever. Looking at the whole statute together, my opinion is, that, with the exception of the 42nd section, it must be taken to have reference to courts of law only; and the submission to arbitration must be taken to have reference to courts of law, and therefore this court, as a court of equity, cannot interfere." (9 Sim. 530).

2. Enlargement of the Time for making the Award.

A certain day should be appointed, on or before which the arbitrator is to make his award. But if it is apprehended that the arbitrator may require further time to make his award than the time mentioned, the agreement for reference should give the arbitrator power, if he be not ready at the day named, to enlarge the time for making the award. Under such a power, he must enlarge the time before the original time limited for making the award has expired. And if not precluded by the terms of the power, he may enlarge the time more than once, provided he do so before the expiration of the time given by the former enlargement.

Where there is no provision of this kind, the time may be enlarged by the parties themselves, by an endorsement, which need not be under seal, on the bond of submission or agreement of reference. (Evans v. Thompson, 5 East, 189).

The time may also be enlarged by the court or a judge under the 39th section of the Law Amendment Act.

It has indeed, sometimes, been considered doubtful, whether the power given to the court or judge, under the provisions of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 39, to enlarge the time, applies to any other cases than those particularized in that section, where one party revokes, and the arbitrator proceeds ex parte. Its object, it has been contended, was, that if the arbitrator were disposed to assist either party by not making his award, he should not have power to do so, but should be compellable to proceed; and accordingly, it has been argued, that the words "such arbitrator" mean the arbitrator who has been required to proceed with the reference, notwithstanding the revocation.

Again, it has been said, that the authority of the court cannot be applied, when by the terms of the submission power is given to the arbitrator to enlarge the time.

In Doe d. Jones v. Powell, (7 Dowl. P. C. 539), Pateson, J., referring to the clause which gives the court power to enlarge the time, observes, "That means rather that the court may enlarge the time, where no power is given to the arbitrator to do so; if there is such a power, it is for him to do it; but I doubt if the court would do it in a case where the parties, or the arbitrator, will not consent to proceed with the reference."

It has also been contended, that the act does not apply to cases where, power being given to the arbitrator to enlarge the time, the time originally limited has already expired; for the time being extinct, it is a misapplication of language to speak of enlarging it; and that, if the court should interfere in such a case, it would be granting a new term: they cannot enlarge that which is altogether gone. This would be in effect asking the court to make a new submission.

All these doubts as to the construction of the statute seem to have been removed by the decision of the Court of Exchequer in the recent case of Parberry v. Newman, (7 Mee. & W. 378), where it was held, that the court had power under the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 39, to enlarge the time for an arbitrator to make his award, the arbitrator having power to do so by the terms of the submission, and having allowed the time limited by the submission for making the award to elapse without doing so, and there having been no attempt at revocation by either party, but both parties having been willing to proceed.

3. Revocation of the Submission.

The death of either party to a submission before the award is made is a revocation of the arbitrator's authority. The parties may however provide by the deed of submission, that, if either party die before the award is made, it shall be delivered to his personal representative, in which case it will be available for or against the executors or administrators of the party dying before it is made. (See Lovell on Wills, 12th ed. 52). Nor will it be necessary that the executor of the deceased party should be made a party, but the arbitrator may proceed in his absence. (In re Hare, 6 Bing. N. C. 158; 8 Scott, 387). In the case referred to, two partners, named Milne and Harwell, referred to arbitration all matters in difference between them and another person named Hare. The submission contained a provision, that, in case of the death of either party before the making of the award, the award should be delivered to the personal representatives of the party dying, or such of them as should desire the same. Pending the arbitration, Harwell died, after which event Hare protested against the arbitrator's proceeding, unless the executor of Harwell were made a party, but not till several meetings had been held since Harwell's death. The award, which was in favour of the surviving partner, was made without Harwell's executor having been made a party. An application having been made to the Court of Common Pleas to set aside the award, on the ground that the reference proceeded and the award was made after the death of Harwell, and without his personal representative being made a party to or having notice of the proceedings, and against the objection and protest of Hare, the court thought they should not be justified in setting the award aside, upon motion, on this objection. "If, upon moving to enforce it by attachment, it could be made to appear to us that the party called upon to perform the award incurred any danger or lost any benefit, by reason of the personal representative of the deceased partner not having been brought before the arbitrators, in such case terms and conditions might be imposed calculated to remove such danger or inconvenience, or the party might be left to his remedy by action on the award." (Per Tindal, C.J.).

It does not appear to have been ever decided, that the bankruptcy of a party to a submission will of itself operate as a revocation of the submission. But if a party to a submission become bankrupt before award, and the subject-matter of the reference passes to the assignees, the bankruptcy operates as a revocation of the submission. (Marsh v. Wood, 4 M. & R. 504; 9 B. & C. 659). In Taylor v. Shuttleworth (6 Bing. N. C. 277; 8 Scott, 585) the question was again raised upon motion to set aside an award, but as it appeared to the court, that the fact of the bankruptcy was not satisfactorily made out upon the affidavits, the court were not in a situation to determine the point. But an opinion was expressed, that supposing the fact to have been made out, it would not have been a revocation of the submission; "because, according to the case of Marsh v. Wood, (ubi sup.), though the bankruptcy might be held to be a revocation, where the party had the power to revoke, yet in a case where the party had not the power to revoke, the bankruptcy of either would not operate as a revocation. In this case, neither party had authority to revoke the submission, [the whole proceedings of the reference being completed, except the making of the award]; and therefore the bankruptcy of one of them would not have that effect." (Per Erskine, J.)

4. Awarding Costs.

The submission should give the arbitrator an express authority to award the payment of the costs of the reference. If the submission contain no provision respecting the costs, the arbitrator cannot award the costs of the reference and award; but they will be borne in equal shares by the parties. When a cause is referred, and the order of reference is silent as to costs, the arbitrator has power over the costs of suit, but not over the costs of the reference. Under a power of giving costs generally, it seems that he may award the costs of the reference, as well as those of the action. (Watson on Arbitration, 123; Caldwell, 89, 92). But an arbitrator cannot award costs as between attorney and client, without a special authority for that purpose. (Secombe v. Babb, 6 Mee. & W. 129). B.

MASTER IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Henry Moore, of Wimborne Minster, Dorsetshire, Gent., to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

DEATH OF SIR ALEXANDER CROKE.—This event took place at the seat of the learned gentleman, Studley Priory, Oxfordshire, on Tuesday last. He was called to the Bar in 1786, and presided as Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court in Nova Scotia for many years. On his retirement from that office in 1816, he received the honour of Knighthood. In 1823, he became a bencher of the Inner Temple, and in 1829 was appointed Treasurer. He died at the advanced age of 84.

SELWYN'S NISI PRIUS.—TENTH EDITION.

IMPORTANT AND SALUTARY IMPROVEMENTS have been introduced into the practice of Life Assurance by this Company. All the advantages peculiar to mutual life assurance, arising from a division amongst the assured of the whole of the mutual profits, and that security and freedom from responsibility which proprietary companies can alone afford, are combined by the constitution of this, the only guaranteed Mutual Society.

By a half-premium credit system, one-half of the premiums may be retained for the first seven years, and repaid at the convenience of the assured; and by the ascending scale a greatly diminished rate of premium is required for the first twelve years, combining the advantages of an assurance for the whole duration of life with the economy of a temporary policy.

By the Deed of Constitution, all policies issued by this Company are declared to be INDEFEASIBLE and INDISPUTABLE, unless obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation, which renders them peculiarly valuable as documents of security.

COMMISSION.—The solicitor who transacts an assurance with this Company, is held to be the agent of the policy during its currency, and receives the usual commission upon all the future premiums, by whomsoever they may be paid.

Prospectuses, schedules, and every information requisite to enable parties to effect assurances, will be forwarded, free of expense, by the agents or manager.

LONDON, JANUARY 7, 1843.

WE return to Mr. Stewart's observations on Reform in the Law, for the purpose of commenting; first, on the alterations which he proposes, for applying the jurisdiction of equity to cases where the amount of property in litigation is small; or where, without reference to the amount of property, the nature of the proceedings is administrative rather than litigatory; and secondly, on the alterations which he proposes for shortening conveyances and facilitating the transfer of lands.

The suggestions which we made on the first of these subjects in former numbers of THE JURIST, (vol. 4, p. 185, and vol. 6, p. 301), and of which we find the principle involved in Mr. Stewart's propositions, were, that in suits of an administrative character, it should be permitted, under the sanction of the Court, to dispense wholly, or in part, with the formal allegations, and the still more formal replies to them, which now fill bills and answers respectively as to facts, the existence of which is not denied by any party to the suit, and the mode of stating which is perfectly immaterial, provided they are in some manner brought before the Court. And as to suits touching matters of small amount, we ventured to suggest, that, for these, some very short mode of pleading might be laid down, which, coupled with a limited power of applying oral examination to the parties and to witnesses, might enable a court acting on equitable principles, to adjudicate usefully on questions of equity affecting sums of small amount.

There can scarcely be any question, that, with regard to suits wholly or principally of an administrative character, it would be perfectly practicable, by the aid of General Orders, to dispense with nearly the whole of the bill and answer. Mr. Stewart, however, goes further on this point than the contemplation of mere alterations in pleading. His main proposition is to convert the Masters into Judges; to abolish them we presume, though he is not quite explicit on this point, as Masters, and to make them Judges in Equity for suits involving matters under a given value, and for suits of the administrative class; and to take the management of such suits from their inception to their final determination.

If a certain number of Judges were appointed with such a jurisdiction, we fully agree with Mr. Stewart, that benefit would result from it. And as to the difficulty of determining the extent of their powers, and the forms of pleading and practice which would be useful in such courts, surely the learned persons who are capable of framing Orders for the regulation of proceedings in the higher Courts, could find no great difficulty in framing Rules for the proceedings of inferior ones.

But if the plan shadowed forth by Mr. Stewart is intended to abolish the particular office of Master, and to leave as an Equity establishment, only the superior courts to deal with hostile suits, and suits touching considerable property, and the new inferior courts to deal with administrative suits, and those which affect small amounts of property; then to such a plan we conceive innumerable objections present themselves. What for instance is to be the mode of dealing under the proposed new plan, with exceptions of all kinds to pleadings, or with references of title, arising in suits commenced in the superior court? Is it intended that such matters should be dealt with by the superior court itself, or that they should be referred to the inferior Judge as they now are to the Master? Either of these courses seems very inconvenient. Again, even in heavy suits not of an administrative character, inquiries, which are in fact of the same nature as those which constitute the great business of administrative suits, will sometimes occur; and how are they to be dealt with? To suppose that the superior court is itself to take such inquiries, is of course preposterous; and to refer them to the inferior judge would hardly consist with his increased dignity, besides interfering with his administration of his own judicial business. It is difficult to see how the Equity Judges can ever dispense wholly with the Masters, or with some officers having a considerable portion of their duties. Mr. Stewart touches slightly on this difficulty of the subject, (see p. 52 of his Observations), but hardly we apprehend attributes to it sufficient weight.

We pass now to the next important point of Legal Reform to which Mr. Stewart addresses himself, viz. the shortening of assurances; and on this subject his plan is rather singular; the principle of it is this, that a series of Acts of Parliament should be passed, embodying the common forms now used in conveyances; and connecting them with certain very short forms of conveyances, by declaring that when parties execute those short forms, they shall be intended to adopt, and shall have the benefit of the several full forms which the act attaches to the respective portions of the short ones. Thus, for instance, for an ordinary conveyance of lands, he proposes that the Act should provide a form consisting of a table, in which the first column should contain the name and description of the vendor, the date of his signature, and the attestations of the witnesses; column the second, the same particulars with regard to the purchaser; column the third, the consideration-money; and column the fourth, description of the property. The Act is then to declare, that by adopting and signing such form, the land is to be vested in the purchaser and his heirs; that the vendor by signing adopts such and such covenants—setting forth according to the most approved common forms the usual covenants entered into by a vendor; and that the grant of the lands shall include all ways &c., and the reversion &c., setting forth the common form for the general words usually following the parcels.

Mr. Stewart's plan is therefore to fix as a standard by act of Parliament the common forms now in use, and to establish at the same time a set of parliamentary symbols representing or referrible to those common forms, so that a conveyance executed according to the parliamentary symbols, shall draw to itself the benefit of the common forms; and this he proposes to be applied for all varieties of deeds, purchase-deeds, mortgages, leases, &c.

The plan is undoubtedly ingenious, and deserving of consideration. Nevertheless, several objections to its efficacy occur at once. In the first place, although it is quite true, that, in a majority of cases, the frame of most deeds of the same class is very similar, and might without disadvantage be entirely so, yet it constantly occurs that special points of detail require to be provided for, both in the conveying and covenanting parts. The proposed Acts, to be of any extensive use, would require therefore to embody as great a variety of forms, as are to be found in the published books of precedents; and even then they would fall very far short of the wants of the practitioner, since it is well known that circumstances render it in practice of daily necessity, for the conveyancer to modify in some slight particulars his common forms. In the next place, although undoubtedly the length and bulk of muniments of title would be enormously diminished, and consequently that perpetuation of expense which depends upon writing and copying on each successive transaction, would be avoided, yet it is questionable whether an increase of labour and difficulty would not be thrown upon professional men in investigating titles and preparing deeds; and whether, therefore, on the whole, the transfer of property would be much facilitated. In considering, for instance, the effect of one of these short parliamentary deeds, it would of course be necessary always to refer to the Act to see what were the covenants and other clauses that the parties had adopted; and if, as would constantly happen, the transactions were in the least complicated, and the parties had been under the necessity of using any combinations of the short forms, or sets of symbols; or if they had gone still further, and added, as Mr. Stewart proposes, provisos and stipulations of their own, much confusion and difficulty would frequently ensue in determining what forms were drawn into operation by the symbols used, and what would be the effect on the forms of the variations introduced by the parties. We would not be understood to assert that the forms at present in use are not of a length, which in many cases is simply useless, and in many more absolutely pernicious. But we doubt whether any mode of alteration which shall prevent the conveyancer from having before him the effective parts of a deed in the deed itself, will not introduce sources of omission, perplexity, and misunderstanding, which will be more than a counterbalance for the extinction of length. We confess we should prefer seeing some short form of conveyance provided by legislative enactment, on the footing for instance of those introduced into the numerous Railway Acts, accompanied perhaps by a declaration of the meaning attached by the Legislature to the operative words of such conveyances. Short forms of this kind, if put forth and sanctioned, without being in any way made compulsory, by the Legislature, would probably be employed in transfers of small properties, and would, after a few years, acquire a settled construction, which would render them sufficient for the purposes to which they would be applied. As for estates of great extent and value, they are almost always placed under circumstances which render forms of great minuteness, and consequently of considerable length, unavoidable.

ON RESTRICTIVE CONDITIONS OF SALE.

The practice of selling under what are commonly called restrictive conditions of sale, is of very modern origin, having arisen out of the dangerous state into which it was found that most titles had fallen, and the incapacity of vendors, generally speaking, to support their titles by such evidence as a prudent purchaser would call for. Of the policy of forcing at all upon purchasers, contracts founded upon conditions of this nature, some doubt may be entertained; for it is clear that, unless the persons attending sales were generally informed as to what constitute defects of title, they are not much put on their guard by conditions couched in technical language, restraining them from requiring proofs, the importance or unimportance of which they are unable to appreciate. On these grounds it seems, that restrictive conditions of sale have found but little favour in the eyes of Courts of Equity, and are generally to be construed strictly against the vendor.

That a vendor who has a defective title may, by apt conditions, so guard himself, as to compel a purchaser to take the title with its defects, is quite clear; but then the conditions must be perfectly explicit. This was determined in Freme v. Wright, (4 Mad. 364), in which the restrictive condition was, that the purchaser should have an assignment of the vendor's interest "under such title as he lately held the same." And it was expressly put to the bidders by the auctioneer, that the sale was a re-sale directed on account of a defect in the title, and that the purchaser was not to expect a good title, but to take it as it was. The purchaser was compelled to take the title. The case, it may be thought, could hardly admit of a doubt, unless it was meant to overthrow the rule, that parties sui juris, dealing with each other at arm's length, and without fraud, will be held to their mutual contract, however much it may be to the disadvantage of one of them. For it was impossible to read the condition and not to see that the vendor contracted only to grant what he had, whether it were good or bad. The same point was decided at law in Wilnot v. Wilkinson, (6 B. & C. 511). But the vendor, to be thus supported in forcing a defective title on the purchaser, must explicitly make his intention to do so appear on the condition of sale. Therefore, where a vendor contracted to execute and deliver a valid irredeemable disposition of the property, and to deliver to the purchaser certain specified instruments, and it was added "which are all the title-deeds of the property in his custody," it was determined that the purchaser was not restricted to those instruments. (Dick v. Donald, 1 Bligh, N. S., 655). There can be no doubt in the mind of any one, that the vendor intended by the particular reservation, taken alone, to exclude the purchaser from calling for the deeds, which he, the vendor, had not; but it will be observed, that the expression of such intention in the restrictive clause was inconsistent with the preceding contract to execute and deliver a valid irredeemable disposition; in other words, to make a good title; and, therefore, whatever might have been the vendor's intention, he did not, on the whole, explicitly express it.

In a recent case before Lord Cottenham, where the same sort of question arose, the fourth condition of sale provided that the vendor should deliver an abstract and deduce a good title. The sixth was in the following words:—"The vendor will deliver up to the purchaser of the greater part in value of the said estates, all the title-deeds and copies of deeds and other documents in his custody, but shall not be bound or required to produce any original deed, or other documents than those in his possession, and set forth in the abstract, or which relate to other property; and such purchaser is to enter into the usual covenants for the production of the title-deeds to the purchaser or purchasers, or proprietor of the remaining or other lots; but if the largest portion in value of the estate shall remain unsold, the vendor shall be entitled to retain the deeds, upon entering into such covenants. All such covenants to be prepared by and at the expense of the person or persons requiring the same, who may have attested copies of such deeds at his or their own expense."

Lord Cottenham held, reversing the judgment of the Court below, that the fourth condition was a positive contract to make a good title; that the sixth did not destroy its effect; and that the purchaser had a right to have the title set forth in the abstract, verified by producing the title-deeds themselves, or if the vendor had them not, by other satisfactory evidence. (Souzby v. Hutt, 2 Myl. & C. 207).

This case is particularly important as shewing the strong leaning of the Courts against such conditions. For the sixth condition, it will be recollected, distinguished between "delivering up" deeds, and "producing" them. The vendor was to "deliver up" such deeds as he had; but as to such as he had not, he guarded himself against "producing" them. Unless, therefore, the vendor did mean to make a distinction between production as incident to delivery, and production for the purpose of evidence, there could be no reason for the use of the two distinct terms. And the argument of the Court on this point, that, if the word "produce" had been used in the more general sense, "it would not have been confined to deeds in the possession of the vendor, because, for the purpose of proving the abstract, the production of deeds not in his possession, but of which he had the right or the means of procuring the production, would have been equally available," is so extremely refined as to shew that the court was astute to a construction of the restrictive condition, which should not support it.

The principle which we collect from this case is, that if a vendor has in one part of the conditions of sale distinctly and positively undertaken to make a good title, he shall not be intended to destroy that contract by other conditions, which by themselves might be inconsistent with the making a good title, unless upon the strictest construction they are incapable of any other meaning.

Such conditions have been further disapproved in a late case*, in which the court said, they ought to be discouraged, and subjected to strict construction; and on the whole, it would seem that vendors, to obtain the benefit of conditions guarding them against making the usual proof of good title, must take care to frame their conditions of sale, so as positively and specifically to ascertain the particular matters which they intend to withhold; and must make it perfectly clear on the face of the conditions, that they do intend the restrictions to cut down the general liability to make a title.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INSTITUTED 1824.

A Third Quinquennial Division of Profits was made in January, 1842, and the Bonus then divided amounted, on an average, to 28½ per cent. on the Premiums paid.

By comparing the Rates of Premium, (as below), it will be seen that they are LOWER than those of most other Offices, particularly for Terms of Years.

Persons of all ages may be assured in this Office.

LAW BOOKS.

Mr. HODGSON will SELL by AUCTION, at his Great Room, 192, Fleet-street, (Corner of Chancery-lane), on TUESDAY next, Jan. 10, at half-past 12, (by order of the Executors),

THE VALUABLE LAW LIBRARY of EDWARD HUGHES, late of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at Law, deceased, including a fine set of the Statutes at Large to 5 Vict., Hamilton's Hedaya, Bythewood and Jarman's Conveyancing, Series of the Modern Reports in Law and Equity complete to the present time, Treatises and Books of Practice.

To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

This day is published, price 10*s*. 6*d*., Part II.,

REPORTS and NOTES of CASES on LETTERS PATENT for INVENTIONS. By THOMAS WEBSTER, Esq., Barrister at Law.

Thomas Blenkarn, 19, Chancery-lane.

LAW.—A Gentleman who has served Three Years of his Articles with a Solicitor in the Country, is desirous of being ASSIGNED for the rest of his term, to some SOLICITOR of GOOD GENERAL PRACTICE in London, where he can take an active part in the business under the immediate directions of the principal. Apply to E. Freestone, Esq., Solicitor, Norwich.

LAW.—A Gentleman recently out of his Articles, (the first four years of which were passed in a highly respectable Office in the Country, and the last year in London; the first six months with the Agents of the Gentleman to whom he was articled, and the remaining six months with a Conveyancing Counsel), is desirous of obtaining a SITUATION as an Assistant Common-Law Clerk. Salary not so much an object as a respectable Office of Extensive Practice, where he would have an opportunity of improvement. Most unexceptionable references can be given. Letters are requested to be addressed to A. Y. Z., 21, Lincoln's Inn Fields.

Just published, price 6*s*.

SUGGESTIONS AS TO REFORM IN SOME BRANCHES OF THE LAW.

1. The Mode of Remunerating the Profession.
2. The Alienation, Mortgaging, and Settling Real Property.
3. The Court of Chancery, and the Masters' Office.
4. The Enfranchisement of Copyholds.
5. The Consolidation and Digest of the Statute and Common Law.

By JAMES STEWART, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.—THIRD EDITION.

In 3 vols., royal 8vo., 4*l*. 1*s*. 6*d*. boards.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of EVIDENCE AND DIGEST of PROOFS in CIVIL and CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS. Third Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions. By THOS. STARKIE, Esq., of the Inner Temple, one of her Majesty's Counsel.

"There are now two general treatises on this extensive and intricate branch of Law, Mr. Starkie's and Mr. Phillpotts's, of which it is not too much to say, that they excel all the text books of the day in the combination of learning and research with clear method and scientific precision. Mr. Phillpotts's work, however, labours under this disadvantage, that it is confined to an examination of the general principles of Evidence, and does not treat of the rules applicable to particular subjects and actions, otherwise than as they illustrate those general principles. Mr. Starkie on the other hand, reserving the first part of his work chiefly for the discussion of general principles, devotes two closely printed volumes to a Digest, alphabetically arranged, of the Rules of Evidence and the proof applicable to particular subjects and actions. It is in this that the great practical superiority and utility of Mr. Starkie's book consists."
